PREFACE.

This volume is the result of a year's solid and useful work, the keynote being struck by Mr. Fowler in his excellent article on the great house of St. Walery. The interesting and valuable Dunche manuscript commenced in the last volume has now been completed. From a genealogical point of view its chief claim to importance lies in the full list which it contains of the members of the Court and the servants of the royal Household in the reign of Henry VIII, but it has a far deeper interest for the historian and the antiquary, and I hope that the subscribers will be kind enough to bring it to the notice of friends for whom genealogy may perhaps have but little interest. Great pains have been expended in recording the inscriptions in the Church of Abbey Dore, and translations have been supplied of some curious and difficult Latin epitaphs, notably that to Serjeant John Hoskyns on pp. 128-131. In the Kingsley article Mr. Pink has given the pedigree of one of our most eminent men of letters, the late Charles Kingsley. His descent from an old royalist stock will be somewhat of a surprise to many, and it will be found that his biographers have been even more than usually astray in their statements as to his ancestry. The late Mr. Crawley-Boevey's Barrow pedigree is a fitting supplement to his well known family history published some years ago under the title of "The Perverse Widow." Mr.

This volume is the result of a year's solid and useful work, the keynote being struck by Mr. Fowler in his excellent article on the great house of St. Walery. The late Mr. Crawley-Boevey's Barrow pedigree is a fitting supplement to his well known family history published some years ago under the title of "The Perverse Widow." Mr.

Challenor Smith's paper on the families of Fox and Tattershall seems to add at least one more to the many quarterings in the shield of the Earl Marshal.

Our thanks are especially due to Mr. C. Graham Botha for the Extracts of Baptisms and Marriages at the Cape of Good Hope, which it was found advisable to print as separate Supplements to the Magazine.

Mr. Keith W. Murray's instructive remarks on the Great Seal of the Order of the Garter, on p. 257, renders it unnecessary for me to give any account of the frontispiece to this volume, which will, I feel sure, be as much admired by the subscribers as was its counterpart last year.

The Genealogist.

DE ST. WALERY.

By G. Herbert Fowler.

The usual difficulty in piecing together scattered and inconsequent references to men of a remote past has not been lessened by the family having, so to speak, one leg in Ponthieu and one in England; but in compensation, the bigger the seigneur, the more easily is he traced, and these were important folk on both sides of the Channel. To the Rev. H. Salter I owe many useful references, the results of his studies of religious foundations in Oxfordshire; to Mr. H. J. Ellis much helpful guidance to charters; to both my best thanks are due.

The family derived its name from the little port of St. Walery on the estuary of the Somme, the capital of Vimeu (Vinemagus) in the Earldom of Ponthieu; from here William the First sailed to the conquest of England. The port in its turn took its name from the Abbey of St. Walery, a saint of Merovingian date and evangelist of Northern Gaul.[1] The head of the family was always Advocatus (Avoué) of St. Walery, an office which may perhaps be translated "Hereditary Bailiff," holding the Abbey lands as part of his domain, but apparently not doing vassal service.

The chief castle of this family on the French side was at Gamaches en Vimeu (Gualimago, Walimago, Gammagium, Gamachie), from which it has been presumed that the early family De Gamages in England took name. Gamaches en Vexin seems to be of later origin, and named after the older town. They held land at other places in the Vimeu and elsewhere, and had also possessions in Rouen.

The first to emerge at all clearly into the light of history was one Gilbert, Advocatus of St. Walery. He is stated to have married Papia, daughter of Richard the Second or "the Good," Duke of the Normans (reigned 996—1026), and to have left a son, Bernard (II), whose eldest son was Walter[2] (I).

Waleran, lord of Breteuil, is said to have made a gift to St. Denys' Church for the soul of this Gilbert.[3]

But even the name of Gilbert does not seem quite beyond question. A somewhat uncritical paper on "Gamaches et ses Seigneurs," by F. Darsy,[4] in which assertions are more frequent than references, founded apparently on an unpublished MS. of Ducange, assigns as husband to Papia a Bernard de St. Walery, son of Bernard, Count of Guisnes, and Emma, daughter and heiress of Renault de St. Walery. The Genealogist.

DE ST. WALERY.

By G. Herbert Fowler.

The usual difficulty in piecing together scattered and inconsequent references to men of a remote past has not been lessened by the family having, so to speak, one leg in Poutlieu and one in England; but in compensation, the bigger the seigneur, the more easily is he traced, and these were important folk on both sides of the Channel. To the Rev. H. Salter I owe many useful references, the results of his studies of religious foundations in Oxfordshire; to Mr. H. L. Ellis much helpful guidance to charters; to both my best thanks are due.

The family derived its name from the little port of St. Valery on the estuary of the Somme, the capital of Vimen (Vimemagus) in the Bayldom of Poutlieu; from here William, the first sailed to the conquest of England. The port in its turn took its name from the Abbey of St. Valery, a saint of Merovingian date and evangelist of Northern Gaul.[1] The head of the family was always Advocatus (Avoué) of St. Valery, an office which may perhaps be translated "Hereditary Bailiff," holding the Abbey lands as part of his domain, but apparently not doing vassal service.

The chief castle of this family on the French side was at Gamaches on Vimen (Gualimago, Valimago, Gammaginum, Gamaches), from which it has been presumed that the early family De Gamages in England took name. Gamaches en Vexin seems to be of later origin, and named after the older town. They held land at other places in the Vimen and elsewhere, and had also possessions in Rouen.

The first to emerge at all clearly into the light of history was one Gerard, Advocatus of St. Valery. He is stated to have married Papia, daughter of Richard the Second or "the Good," Duke of the Normans (reigned 996—1026), and to have left a son, Bernard (II), whose eldest son was Walter[2] (I).

Walerun, lord of Brotonil, is said to have made a gift to St. Denys' Church for the soul of this Gilbert.[3]

But even the name of Gilbert does not seem quite beyond question. A somewhat uncritical paper on "Gamaches et ses Seigneurs," by F. Darsy,[4] in which assertions are more frequent than references, founded apparently on an unpublished MS. of Duchesne, assigns as husband to Papia a Bernard de St. Valery, son of Bernard, Count of Guisnes, and Emma, daughter and heiress of Renault de St. Valery. In many points

[1] Freeman: Norm. Conquest (ed. 1869), iii, 391, et. seq.

[3] Duchesne: Dreux, 70.
[4] Darsy: Gamaches et ses Seigneurs. Mém. Soc. Antiq. Picardie, xiii, 99; xiv, 393.

Darsy's account of later members of this family can be shown by documents to be wrong, and the points here taken from him must therefore be regarded as in need of confirmation.

E. Prarond,[5] in a similarly uncritical compilation, and also using unpublished MSS., does not wholly agree with Darsy as to the earlier generations, but assigns Gilbert as husband to Papia. Yet another husband, Walter de St. Valery, is given to her by Robert of Torigny.[6] On the whole, while Orderic, who lived between 1075 and 1141, seems to be the most trustworthy, there is a general agreement as to the marriage with Papia early in the eleventh century. Behind that date Norman genealogies are apt to be nebulous.

Of other sources—a few notes on the family were furnished by André du Chesne, which (for the very little way that they reach) agree with my results except in placing a Bernard (for whom no documentary evidence is offered) instead of my Reginald[7] (II). In a paper on the family de Braose, Mr. Cary Elwes quoted incidentally[8] two pedigrees of St. Walery from Planché, and Thorpe's Lappenberg; they were not supported by authorities, and need not to be dealt with here.

Walter (I), who held Isleworth and Hampton in Middlesex at Domesday,[9] was "of the Conquest," and gave certain men liberties and land belonging to these churches, together with the churches of Twickenham and Heston, to the monks of St. Walery at an annual rent.[10] He also held land in Suffolk.[11]

His castle of St. Walery was the first to be reduced, "by cunning or treasure," by William the Second, when he set out to wrest Normandy from his brother, Duke Robert, in 1090.[12]

In 1096 Walter accompanied Robert the Second, Duke of Normans, his second cousin, on the great Crusade preached by Peter the Hermit, and was still in the Holy Land with his son, Bernard, in 1097.[13] Orderic records him as Robert's grandson, and Papia's son. According to Darsy, quoting the Continuator of Aimon, he married a daughter of Miles le Grand, seigneur of Montlhéry and Bray and vicomte of Troyes[14]; but a reference to the selection from this chronicle seems to show that Elizabeth, a sister of Miles de Bray, married Joscelin de Cortenay; and was "lady of St. Walery," presumably by another marriage.[15]

Bernard (III) fought in the same division as his father Walter, after the siege of Nicæa was raised in 1097, according to Orderic.

Walter (I), who held Isleworth and Hampton in Middlesex at Domesday,[9] was "of the Conquest," and gave certain non liberties and land belonging to these churches, together with the churches of Twickenham and Heston, to the monks of St. Valery at an annual rent.[10] He also held land in Suffolk.[11]

His castle of St. Valery was the first to be reduced, "by cunning or treasure," by William the Second, when he set out to wrest Normandy from his brother, Duke Robert, in 1090.[12]

In 1096 Walter accompanied Robert the Second, Duke of Normandy, his second cousin, on the great Crusade preached by Peter the Hermit, and was still in the Holy Land with his son, Bernard, in 1097.[13] Orderic records him as Robert's grandson, and Papia's son. According to Darcy, quoting the Continuator of Aimon, he married a daughter of Milo le Grand, seigneur of Montlhéry and Bray and vicomte of Troyes[14]; but a reference to the selection from this chronicle seems to show that Elizabeth, a sister of Milo de Bray, married Joscelin de Courtenay; and was "lady of St. Valery," presumably by another marriage.[15]

Bernard (III) fought in the same division as his father Walter, after the siege of Nicæa was raised in 1097, according to Orderic.

Darsy states that he accompanied William the Conqueror to England in 1066, demanding as his guerdon "l'accointance de la plus gente pucelle que là treuverait"; that he obtained permission to build a fortress at Gamaches in 1096, and died in 1117, aged more than 90.[16] A Bernard appears between 1103 and 1115 as holding five houses in Winchester,[17] who may well be this man; these houses had been of Odo de Esperchefort (p. 13 below).

Reginald (I) is mentioned by Darsy as a brother of Bernard, who also accompanied William to England in 1066. He received the land of "Sarum. Ses descendants existent encore à Oldsarum en Wittshire sous le nom Waimaches ou Ghaimaches [presumably de Gamages], autrefois barons et avoués de Malbesbury et de Wittshire."[18] I have failed to find any confirmation of this statement, in connection either with Sarum or with Malmesbury.

The Rannulfus who held in six Lincolnshire vills at Domesday[19] is somewhat mysterious; this is not a St. Walery name, and may have been possibly a mis-latinization of Renault and intended for this Reginald, who bore one of the commonest names in the family. Reginald (II) was holding two fees in Lincolnshire about 1159.[20]

Darsy states that according to some authors, not quoted, he was executed for his share in the conspiracy of Earl Mowbray against William the Second in 1095.

Reginald (II) was presumably the son of Bernard (III), but may have been the son of Darsy's Reginald (I). So far as the writer has been able to trace, he first appears in the Pipe Roll of 1130 as a holder of lands in Middlesex.[21]

When Stephen crossed to Normandy in 1137 to fight Geoffrey of Anjou, Reginald quarrelled for precedence with William de Ypre, and a bloody brawl ensued between their followers; the King therefore had to abandon his advance for the moment.[22] With his son Bernard he granted a charter between 1144 and 1151[23]; he gave moneys to the nuns of Bertaucourt to buy them fish and to clout their shoes.[24] His gift of Elmstree, co. Glouc., to Amesbury was confirmed by Richard I to Fontevrault.[25] Conjointly with John de St. John, he made gifts to Godstow at its foundation (p. 5 below).

He was Dapifer or Steward, at some time before 1154, to Henry, Duke of Normandy,[26] who became afterwards our Henry the Second, and about 1157 witnessed a charter of Henry at Rouen.[27] In 1155-6 he occurs as a holder of lands in eleven counties.[28] In 1158 he was in the Holy Land at the siege of Caesarea, and placed in charge of the camp of "Harenc" (chateau d'Arennes) by Baldwin[29]; in 1160 he witnessed a charter which granted Bethel to St. Sepulchre, while he was still in Palestine.[30] By 1162 he was back in Normandy[31]; and in 1164 signed the Constitutions of Clarendon. On the flight to France of Archbishop Thomas Beket he was one of the mission sent to King Lewis of France in 1164 to intrigue against the Archbishop.[32]

He was Justiciar of all Normandy,[33] and, probably in that capacity, with Rotrocus, Bishop of Evreux (1139-65), made in 1163 by the King's order a "recognition" of the services due on the fees of barons and castellans of the Count of Flanders.[34] A letter of 1155-8 from John of Salisbury to Pope Adrian, shows that he found it difficult to recover 60 marks owed to him by Count Alberic.[35] He held and mortgaged land in the cathedral precinct at Rouen, which was recovered by his son Walter the Archdeacon.[36]

At the scutage of Toulouse [1159] he was assessed at 100 marks for 50 knight's fees, in Oxfordshire[37]; and was thus already holding the Barony formerly of Ivri (compare the scutage in 1161[38]). The "caput baronie" was at Oseney by Oxford. At the great Inquest of 1166, his name appears as holding fees in Hampshire, Lincolnshire, and Berkshire, from the Bishops of Winchester and Lincoln, and from the Abbot of Abingdon; but I have failed to find any "carta" of his Oxford barony. This may be due to his recent death, which probably took place in 1166, as his son Bernard rendered account in 1166-7.[39]

No mention by name of Reginald's wife has been found; and a consideration of her probable parentage brings us at once on to disputable ground—the connection between St. John and St. Walery. The facts at present available seem to be as follows:—

(1) John de St. John granted the "land of Godestowe" to Ediva, first Abbess, in a charter[40] addressed to A[lexander], Bishop of Lincoln 1123—1148. This was presumably before the dedication of the church in presence of King Stephen and Queen Matilda in 1138; on this occasion[41] Reginald de St. Walery (II), as well as John de St. John, granted the site on which the Nunnery stood—"insulam infra duos pontes et supra dicta que Johannes de sancto Honore[42] dedit." seems therefore that Reginald (II) was either already regarded as heir of, or was holding conjointly with, John de St. John.

(2) In 1166 Reginald (II) was holding in Hampshire two fees of the Bishop of Winchester, which had been held by John de St. John [43] (now dead).

(3) Between 1140 and 1150 John de St. John gave to Eynsham the church of Northleigh (co. Oxon.); between 1154 and 1161 Reginald confirmed the gift (dates from Mr. Salter's Eynsham Cartulary).

(4) Lands in Haseldene (co. Glouc.) passed from John de St. John to the monks of Kingswood; Reginald appears ultimately as their patron in virtue of these lands.

It seems therefore certain that as regards some of his lands Reginald was "heir" of John de St. John. The latter died, according to Mr. Salter, about 1150; without children, but not without heir of his blood, for his brother Roger left male children.[44] In so far as Reginald was his "heir," the claim therefore would seem to be through a woman. If Reginald and John had married sisters and heiresses, on the death of the latter, Reginald would be heir of their "maritagia." Less probably by dates, but still possibly, if Reginald had married John's daughter and heiress, he would be John's heir for her "maritagium" at least. Either hypothesis would fit the facts at present known; and the presumption is that the heiress or heiresses brought with them the barony of Ivri, which is found from 1155-6 in the family of St. Walery.

The "Historia Fundationis of Kingswood" tells a different tale [45]—that Stephen gave certain lands to John de St. John at the time of the troubles, but that, on the return of peace and justice, when each man came by his own again, Reginald recovered his lands. It is true that Reginald (II) and his son Bernard (IV) were dispossessed by Stephen of their rightful inheritance in England, as appears by charters [46] dated by Mr. Round as of 1141-51, 1151-4. But against this story may be urged that John seems to have been on the other side; he witnessed a charter of the Empress Matilda to Eynsham [47] in 1141-2, and was with the young Henry when he raised the standard of revolt against Stephen [48] in 1149. The tradition seems therefore to be unsound. More probably Stephen seized John de St. John's lands at his death (if not earlier), as his "heir" Reginald de St. Walery was an officer of Henry's household.

White Kennett hazarded the guess [49] that Alanora, wife of Bernard (IV) de St. Walery was a daughter of John de St. John. Not only are the dates against this, but his father Reginald and not he, was "heir" of John de St. John. This explanation therefore may also be rejected.

The question could probably be answered with a fair approach to certainty by tracing the history of all the lands in the baronies of Ivri,

The present writer merely notes, for what it is worth, that out of ten vills in which successive members of St. Walery made grants to religious houses, at Domesday Book nine were in the hands of Roger de Ivri, one in those of Roger de Oilli ; in three of these at least John de St. John was their successor.

Guy (I) confirmed to the monks of St. Walery the concession of his grandfather Walter.[50] He was therefore probably brother of Reginald (II) and son of either Bernard (III) or Reginald (I).

Walter (II), a younger son of Reginald (II) and brother of Bernard[51] (IV) was Archdeacon of Rouen, and appears in various French charters. He served as demesne and household clerk to Richard the First.[52]

From his father he received a prebend which had been of Walter, Archdeacon of Oxford (ob. 1151), for which the monks of Oseney were to pay him an annual rent of 10 li. He witnessed his brother Bernard's charter to Lieu Dieu in 1191.[53] With others he contributed to the building of the Chapter House at Rouen.[54]

Bernard (IV) with his father granted a charter between 1144 and 1151, as already said ; and appears in French charters from 1165-6 to 1190.[55] Generous to the Church, he founded the Nunnery of Studley in Oxfordshire about 1175-9, for the salvation of his [late] wife Matilda, and his [then] wife Alanora, and others [56] ; he granted the "place" of Godstow and manor of Wolvercote to Henry II, who was so richly to endow the Nunnery there ; and it is interesting to note that he gave the king seisin by the unusual means of "a silken cloth whereof was made a chasuble."[57] Under the style of "lord of Gamaches," he founded in 1191 a new Godstow, Locus Dei or Lieu Dieu, between Picardy and Normandy [58] ; and he gave land for the translation from Tetbury of what was to be Kingswood Abbey.[59] He made a grant to Oseney (in his father's lifetime), between 1151 and 1156, of whatever of his fee pertained to the Church of St. George in Oxford Castle, as well as further grants at a later date.[60].

He seems to have had rights over the port of St. Walery, since he granted "a quittance in the port," presumably from port dues, to Roger de Bercheley and the men of his table.[61] To the Lady Philippa, a nun of Fontevrault, he granted in 1181 half a mark from his exchequer for her life, with reversion to the Abbey [62] ; this suggests a possible

From his father he received a prebend which had been of Walter, Archdeacon of Oxford (ob. 1151), for which the monks of Oseney were to pay him an annual rent of 10 li. He witnessed his brother Bernard's charter to Lieu Dieu in 1191.[63] With others he contributed to the building of the Chapter House at Rouen.[64]

Bernard (IV), with his father granted a charter between 1144 and 1151, as already said; and appears in French charters from 1165-6 to 1190.[65] Generous to the Church, he founded the Nunnery of Studley in Oxfordshire about 1173-9, for the salvation of his [late] wife Matilda, and his [then] wife Alnoura, and others[66]; he granted the "place" of Godstow and manor of Wolvercote to Henry II, who was so richly to endow the Nunnery there; and it is interesting to note that he gave the king seisin by the unusual means of "a silken cloth whereof was made a chasuble."[67] Under the style of "lord of Chaucches," he founded in 1191 a new Godstow, Lieu Dieu or Lion Dieu, between Fécamp and Normandy[68]; and he gave land for the translation from Tetbury of what was to be Kingswood Abbey.[69] He made a great to Oseney (in his father's lifetime), between 1151 and 1156, of whatever of his fee pertained to the Church of St. George in Oxford Castle, as well as further grants at a later date.[70].

He seems to have had rights over the port of St. Walery, since he granted "a quittance in the port," presumably from port dues, to Roger de Hercheley and the men of his table.[71] To the Lady Philippa, a nun of Fontevrault, he granted in 1181 half a mark from his exchequer for her life, with reversion to the Abbey[72]; this suggests a possible sister, who had entered religion. In 1150 he made war on Jean I, Count of Ponthieu, who had espoused Laura, Bernard's sister, and repudiated her on the grounds of consanguinity; the Count bought peace by ceding to him Domart and Bernaville.[63] She is said to have married Aleaume de Fontaines, who built the Abbey of Longpré; he and Bernard are named in a charter of 1184.[64]

As holding important lands on both sides of the Channel, he with his son Bernard appear as hostages for a hundred marks in the convention between Henry II and Theodoric, Count of Flanders, made in 1163.[65] He was employed, like his father, by Henry the Second to intrigue against Archbishop Beket, being sent as ambassador to the Pope in 1165.[66]

His first appearance in the Pipe Rolls is in 1166-7, which seems to fix the date of his father's death approximately. Kennett transcribes, and dates as of 1166, a writ of special protection for Bernard's lands and men, addressed to Sheriffs and Bailiffs [67]; this may imply that he was abroad at the time of his father's death. In the Rolls of 1169-70, and 1170-1, there is no entry for him; but in 1171-2 and till 1174-5 Hugh de St. German renders count for the fee of Bernard de St. Walery as one of those "qui cartas non miserunt," in the first year for 50 li. He may have been in the Holy Land, or employed abroad, but was not fighting in Ireland.[68] About 1172 he is recorded as owing military service to the Duke of Normandy for the fee of Valle de Dunt,[69] and was lord of a fee in Rouen.[70] With Ranulf the Justiciar and others he was sent as ambassador to the French King in 1186,[71] and signed a composition of Margaret, Queen of England, "ex parte Regis Anglie."[72] With other lords he signed the delimitation of the County of Amiens, and acknowledged that he held the town of St. Walery as fief of Philippe Auguste, "l'avouerie des terres de l'Abbaye de St. Valéry," Chateau d'Ault, Domart, and Bernaville.[73]

Bernard was present at the agreement between Philippe Auguste and Henry II to take the cross in 1188.[74] On the accession of Richard the First, he seems to have been in high favour; in a writ quoted by Kennett from the Oseney Register, the King speaks of him as "dilecto familiari nostro."[75] In 1191 he accompanied Richard the First as far as Messina on the way to the Crusade, and was among the "fidejussores" of the convention between Richard and the King of France.[76] In this year the custom of "lagan" (the lord's right to wreckage, our "lagend") was abolished all through Ponthieu, a right which he, like other lords, seems to have exercised.[77] It is said to have included the right to hold to ransom, or in default of ransom to massacre, shipwrecked men.[78] He seems to have died in this year, having played an important part alike in England and France.

Bernard was twice married; but nothing certain is known of the parentage of either wife. MATILDA, the first, is mentioned in a grant for her soul.[79] The name of his second wife is given in numerous charters; it was ALANORA (Eleanor), though it appears also as Aanora and Anora; and, by an easy mistake of transcription, as Avora, and even Avoris. There are slight indications of the parentage of these ladies, which I give here in the hope that some one else may light upon the key. In the charter to Oseney just quoted, Bernard (IV) made a grant for the souls (among others) of his wife Matilda and his uncle (auunculus) Simon. These are family names of Beauchamp of Bedford; and I dare do no more than suggest that a plea, which will be referred to below (p. 14), would become much more intelligible if Bernard's first wife Matilda had been a niece of Simon de Beauchamp, Stephen's Dapifer (d. circa 1138). In two charters to Oseney, granted apparently between 1182-3 and 1188-9 by Bernard (IV), occurs among the witnesses "Gerardo nepote meo vicedomino de Pinkeni." The vîdames or vicedomini of Picquigny were the subject of a study[80] by Darsy, not more critical than that on Gamaches; points bearing on this Gerard have been thrown into tabular form below. It seems probable, as "nepos" can hardly here mean grandson, that one wife of Bernard de St. Valery, was an unrecorded daughter of Matilda and of Gerard, vîdame 1131-78; Bernard and this earlier Gerard were both concerned in carrying off cattle of the Abbey of Selincourt, for which Pope Alexander III threatened excommunication;[81] and in 1211, when Enguerran, vîdame 1190—1224, promised to serve Philippe Auguste and to aid neither the Count of Boulogne nor the Emperor Otho, nor the King of England, Thomas de St. Walery was one of his pledges.[82]

Bernard left several children, but their ages and respective mothers are by no means clear. Some of them can be disposed of very briefly.[83]

Reginald (III), who seems to have died before a marriageable age, was alive in 1182—1183.[84] He was betrothed in 1178 to Edela (Adèle), daughter of Jean II, Count of Ponthieu, while still an infant.[85] The marriage contract was drawn by Thibault, Bishop of Amiens, and contained the following clause[86]: "Si Renaldus defecerit, alter filius Bernardi qui heres ipsius fuerit filiam comitis habebit; similiter si filia comitis Edela defecerit, aliam filiam . . Renaldus habere debet."

Bernard (V) was also alive in 1181[87]; but like many others of his time, he died in 1190 at the siege of Acre.[88] He confirmed his father's grants to Oseney "specialiter pro anima . . . Reginaldi fratris mei"[89]; and witnessed his father's grant to Stodley as a knight.[90] He was knighted by 1190,[91] when he witnessed a charter at Rouen on 18th March.

The two ladies following may have been either daughters or sisters of Bernard (IV), and are provisionally put as his daughters in the table appended. It is apparently implied (but not definitely stated) that an Annora married Walter de Westberi, miles; he seems to have died about 1197-8, when she paid 10 marks to have seisin of his lands in Westbiri and Clenefeld[92] [Westbury, co. Bucks, and Clanfield, co. Oxon.]. His name occurred as witness to charters of Bernard (IV).[93]

A second lady, Matilda, better known as Matilda de la Haye, married William de Braiose, and to her arrogance has been attributed her husband's rebellion and disgrace. Imprisoned in Windsor Castle by King John, she is said to have been starved by him to death.[94] She found a keen supporter in Giraldus Cambrensis, who regarded her as "sola mulier illa fere mulierum perpaucarum."[95] She and her husband impleaded (her brother) Thomas in 1200 of lands in Gloucestershire.[96]

Thomas, by the deaths of his elder brothers, Bernard and Reginald, became heir to the Barony, and succeeded his father as seigneur of St. Walery in 1189.[97] Under the marriage contract he also obtained the hand of Adela who had been betrothed to Reginald.

He paid 250 marks on his relief [98] in 1191-2 ; this implies approximately the date of his father's death. The sum was charged in Oxfordshire, but probably covered the whole barony ; he seems to have held no capital honour in Berkshire or Hants in 1194-5, and 1196-7.[99]

When Cœur de Lion invaded France after his return from the Crusades, Thomas seems to have been against him, and his castle of Gamaches was taken in 1196 by the English, and retaken by Guillaume de Ponthieu.[100] This seems to account for his appearance in the roll of Escheats of 1196-7, assessed in Oxfordshire at 18 li.[101] Again in 1211-12 we find him as holding 14½ fees in Oxfordshire in a list [102] of the "honours at some time escheated."

When King John laid hands on the county of La Marche in Aquitaine against the Lusignan family, his first recorded step was to authorise Thomas in 1201 to do all the damage that he could to Ralph de Lusignan, Comte d'Eu, and to promise him indemnity for it.[103] Thomas seems to have risen to the occasion, for in the following year he was to have full control of all his lands, and was praised for faithful service [104] ; the Mayor of Rouen was to free his men who had been captured.

In the list [105] of the value of lands in England, which had belonged to Normans in rebellion in England and escheated to the Crown, in 1205, he appears as holding in Middlesex.[106] The position of a baron with large possessions on both sides of the Channel must have been extraordinarily difficult ; while he tried to remain friends with King John he was at the same time embroiled with his brother-in-law, William of Ponthieu ; and finally recognised the latter as his over lord in 1209.[107] But in the same year he had to pay 500 out of a fine of 1,000 marcs to have King John's favour, and to have his lands of which he had been disseised at the time of the war.[108] In 1210 he was with the army in Ireland.[109]

In 1213 when Philip Augustus was preparing to invade England, the loyalty of Thomas seems to have been at least suspect, for bailiffs were to be put on all his lands, he was summoned before the King, and disseised.[110]

When the war broke out next year he was naturally found on Philip's side; at the battle of Bouvines he distinguished himself as a strenuous soldier with a force of fifty knights and two thousand foot, and completed the rout at the close of the battle.[111] His men came up, full of new wine and singing his poems; for he was not only a man of prowess, but "aliquantulum litteratum."[112] It may be hoped that his poems were better than the hobbling hexameters in which Guillelmus Brito records his achievements:—

"Hinc Sancti Thomas Galerici nobilis heres,
Gamachiis dominans, vicosque et plurima sub se
Castra tenens, clarus dominatu, clarior ortu" [etc.].

With him fought his son-in-law, Robert de Dreux.

In spite of the part which he then played, on intercession of the Bishop of Winchester, he was allowed to come to England and speak with the incensed king, and made his peace[113]; his lands seem to have been restored to him, and in 1217 he was holding in eight counties.[114]

With the consent of his wife "Ela," he confirmed[115] a grant of his father Bernard to Oseney and with the consent of his wife 'Edela' and daughter Aanora he confirmed in 1207 the grants of his father "viri bone memorie" to Lieu Dieu.[116] In 1207 with the consent of his wife and, if Darsy is correct, of his nephew and heir presumptive, Matthew de Gamaches, he founded the Collegiate Church of Gamaches with six canons.[117]

By 1219 he was dead,[118] and Annora his daughter, wife of Count Robert de Droc' (Dreux) was to have her hereditary lands.[119] With him this branch of the name of St. Walery died out. But it was no longer possible to serve two masters, the English king and the French; the Honour of St. Walery in England escheated to the crown, and was conferred on Richard, Earl of Cornwall, the King's brother.

Adela, the wife of Thomas, is the centre of a tragic story, which at least illumines the manners of the age. On a journey with her husband, they were attacked by eight robbers, who overpowered Thomas and violated his wife. Her father, the Count of Ponthieu, to clear the honour of the family, caused her to be shut up in a barrel and set adrift at sea; she was however picked up by a Flemish ship and restored to her husband. In expiation of his fault, the Count granted to the monks of St. Walery the right to fish three days a year from the shores where his daughter had thus escaped her death.[120]

HENRY is mentioned only once in his father's numerous charters [121]; he seems to be the Henry to whom Reginald his nephew (son of Guy) conveyed a virgate in Esthallinicseleya (Asthall Leigh), with which he endowed Godstow.[122] He held at one time or another lands in Norton and Sutton, co. Hants, in Fulebroc (Fulbrook), co. Oxon., and in Henton (Hinton Waldrist), co. Berks,[123] but his tenure was constantly disturbed. In 1205 he was to have his lands, which his brother had rendered (reddidit) to him [124]. But in 1207 his lands in Oxon., Berks, and Hants, were seized into the King's hands by reason of strife between the brothers, and assigned to be held by Ralph Hareng, the bailiff of Thomas.[125]

It seems possible that he was involved in the disgrace of William de Braose, his (supposed) brother-in-law, for in 1214 he was to be delivered to his brother Thomas, while two of the sons of de Braose were still to be retained in custody.[126] In 1215 Henry was to have his lands in Norton and Sutton; soon afterwards he seems to have joined the Barons, for in 1216 all his lands were escheated and given again to Ralph Hareng to hold "to the use of Thomas," and Thomas was to hold them in bail "as before the war"[127]; but later he returned to faith and service of the king, and his lands were restored to him.[128] In 1220 he and [his ? half-sister] Matilda de Braose were in a suit against Reginald de Braose.[129] Kennett states that Henry's lands escheated to the Crown in 1225, because at a trial before the Justices in Eyre in Buckinghamshire, his attorney did not put in an appearance after four days admonition, but pleaded essoin of sick-bed; the Judges took the view that no attorney could be represented by an attorney.[130] No Bucks Eyre for this year seems to have been preserved.

In 1231 Henry impleaded the Abbess of Bertaucourt of customs in Norton and Sutton, co. Hants [131]; this Abbey had been benefited by Reginald (II),—one may imagine, from rents in these vills.

The lands which Henry held (by whatever tenure he may have held them) are worth a moment's consideration. Fulbrook, co. Oxon., at Domesday Book was land of Roger de Ivri, and is traceable later as part of the Barony of St. Walery. But his other lands have quite a different history; of his Hampshire holding, Nortune (Norton, a farm in Wonston) and Sudtune (Sutton Scotney) at Domesday Book were of Odo of Winchester, a Thane who, as Mr. Round says, weathered the storm of the Conquest.[132] Hinton Waldrist (or Hinton St. Wallery), co. Berks, is found in Henry's holding about 1233, of the Earl of Cornwall,[133] that is, of the Honour of St. Walery; and this also at Domesday Book was of Odo of Winchester.[134] Finding thus two discrete parts of Odo's lands in the possession of a St. Walery, one is tempted to identify him with the Odo de [?] Esperchefort, whose houses in Winchester had passed to Bernard (III) de St. Walery (p. 3) before 1115.[135] One is further tempted to wonder whether Norton and Sutton were the two fees held in Hampshire of the Bishop of Winchester by Reginald (II) de St. Walery in 1166, which had been held by John de St. John (p. 5). But the settlement of such queries can only properly be given by some one with a knowledge of the county.

Norton and Sutton, however, confront us with another problem—that Henry de St. Walery appears to have left male issue; for as late as 1307 Richard de St. Walery had been holding in Norton in chief[136]; and in 1316 we find indication that Richard had also held a knight's fee in Sutton.[137] Yet when the Count of Dreux elected to be a Norman, and the Honour of St. Walery in England escheated to the Crown, Henry and his seeming heirs were passed over, and the Honour was given to Earl Richard of Cornwall.

There remains Guy (II), whose exact relationship to Thomas it is not easy to settle. That Thomas was a son of Alanora or Aanora, the second wife of Bernard (IV), is abundantly shown by charters. The reason for regarding Guy as his brother is that Thomas speaks[138] of Guy's undoubted son Reginald (IV) as his "nepos." By the dates as well as for other reasons, this cannot mean grandson in this place.

In a document already cited are given the names of nine barons who were the "fidejussores" of the convention between Philip and Richard the First, made at Messina in 1191.[139] Now while all the rest of the Barons are set out as "X de Y vel Haeres ejus cum toto feodo suo," we find "Be[rnardus] de Sancto Walerico vel ille ex heredibus suis qui Sanctum Walericum tenebit cum toto feodo suo." This seems to indicate that some unusual arrangement or division of the inheritance was in contemplation, and confirms, what I had already suspected on grounds of date, that Guy (II) was older than Thomas (who succeeded next year to the Barony), and was probably the son of the first wife Matilda.

The case seems more or less parallel with that of Ernulf de Mandeville, whom Mr. H. J. Ellis believes to have been born by some earlier wife than Rohese de Vere, and not "disinherited," though the Earldom of Essex and Honour of Mandeville passed to the second son. "Renald (III), Bernard (V), and his other boys" allowed a grant by their father in 1181[140]; that they are not named suggests that the "other boys" were yet young. Reginald (III), Bernard (V) and Thomas, are named in that order,[141] which is probably the order of age. In 1191 (by which time Reginald and Bernard were dead), their father, Bernard (IV) made a grant [142] allowed by "Thomas his son and heir, and his son Henry"; this, the only mention which I have found of Henry in his father's charters, seems to point to his being the youngest son; Thomas and Henry would thus account for "the other boys."

Guy is mentioned in none of these charters, but not on account of his youth, because he seems to have married and to have obtained Aspley (Aspley Guise, co. Beds.) in or before 1179 (see below). He may have been half-brother of Reginald, Bernard and Thomas; or he may have been a cousin; in the latter case "nepos" (above) must be translated "cousin's son" or "cousin once removed"; this seems more than a little forced, where "consanguineus," "consobrinus," or "cognatus," might have been expected. He is found as witnessing[143] a charter between 1166-75 (1172-3 ?); and as a witness [144] to French charters about 1174 and 1175, and is hardly likely to have been a child then, or to have been born much after 1155; at this rate he would be at least thirty-six years old when Bernard (IV) his father died, which must put his birth pretty far back in his father's lifetime. Of the two alternatives, I regard it as most probable that he was the son of Bernard by his first wife Matilda, and (merely on the strength of her fore-name) that Matilda de Haye was his full sister.

Guy has been traced as holding lands in Oxfordshire and Bedfordshire. The Oxfordshire lands at least seem to have been part of the family estate. In 1174-5 he was pardoned 30 shillings in the Pipe Roll for Oxon. He [145] made a grant of lands at Kniton or Knyttingdon (Knighton, a hamlet of Compton Beauchamp in Berks) to the monastery of St. Frideswide in Oxford, and a grant of half-a-mark in the same place to the nuns of Godstow; the latter being witnessed by Reginald.[146] The mention of this place fixes him to the family, for at a later date the Prior of St. Frideswide is found [147] to hold a fee in Knighton "of the honour of St. Walery which Richard the Earl [of Cornwall] holds."

It appears that he impleaded Simon de Beauchamp of Bedford (succeeded 1164-5, dead by 1206-7) of the whole Barony of Bedford, who for the sake of peace gave to him the manor of Aspley (Aspley Guise, Beds.).[148] The Pipe Rolls for Bedfordshire show that in 1179-80

Simon began to pay a fine of 300 marcs to the King for a concord between himself and Guy, which seems to refer to this suit. He gave the advowson of Aspley to the canons of St. Paul in Bedford[149] (afterwards the Priory of Newnham).

It seems probable that at the same time Guy obtained from Simon de Beauchamp lands (not usually described as a manor) in Henlow, co. Beds., which passed eventually to his son Reginald. From these he made a grant[150] of a parcel to Warden Abbey at a rent, for which the monks gave him two marcs de Gersuma, two bezants to his wife, and one bezant to his son. The lands in Henlow went with the manor of Aspley for many years.

The Pipe Rolls for Bedfordshire show him as pardoned for four fees (10s.) on the scutage of Wales in 1191-2, but it is not obvious where these were. There are various references to him in these Rolls up to 1200; and a final concord of 1202-3 to which he was a party has been preserved.[151] A discussion of the still uncertain grounds on which he claimed the Barony of Beauchamp of Bedford would be out of place here.

Aubrey (Albreda), the wife of Guy, was a Taillebois before her marriage[153]; and about 1172 Guy was returned as owing military service to the Duke of Normandy for a knight's fee in the Bessin "pro allodiis Taillebois."[152] On his death she married Walter de Wahull, who seems to have died about 1208, when her son Reginald (IV) rendered count for 40 marcs and 2 palfreys, on his mother's inheritance in Aspley and Henlow, she being then in Normandy.[153] The last entry of her name in the Pipe Rolls is in 1213-4.

Reginald (IV) is proved by numerous documents to have been son of Guy and Aubrey, and was nephew (nepos) of Thomas.[154] He held a fee in Oxfordshire of Thomas in 1211-2[155]; this may have been either Knighton or Asthall Leigh (see below); his last payment on relief was in 1223-4.[156]

In 1225-6 he and his pledge were pardoned a fine of sixty marks for the seisin of Aspley,[157] which he had apparently lost through no fault of his own; he had subenfeoffed Falk de Breauté for a term of the manor; on the rebellion and disgrace of this capable adventurer in 1224, the King seized Aspley, and gave it to his clerk, Henry de Capella, to hold for the remainder of Falk's term[158]; while Henlow was assigned to Robert de Barevill. Reginald seems to have had some difficulty in recovering his manor; and made a grant[159] to the Monastery of St. Frideswide's of all his domain land at Knighton (with certain exceptions),

Simon began to pay a fine of 300 marcs to the King for a concord between himself and Guy, which seems to refer to this suit. He gave the advowson of Ashley to the canons of St. Paul in Bedford [125] (afterwards the Priory of Newnham).

It seems probable that at the same time Guy obtained from Simon de Beauchamp lands (not usually described as a manor) in Henlow, on Biels, which passed eventually to his son Reginald. From these he made a grant [126] of a period to Warden Abbey at a rent, for which the monks gave him two marcs de Gersuma, two besants to his wife, and one besant to his son. The lands in Henlow went with the advowson of Ashley for many years.

The Pipe Rolls for Bedfordshire show him as pardoned for four fees (100) on the scutage of Wales in 1131-2, but it is not obvious where these were. There are various references to him in these Rolls up to 1200, and a final concord of 1202-3 to which he was a party has been preserved [127]. A discussion of the still uncertain grounds on which he claimed the Barony of Beauchamp of Bedford would be out of place here.

Aumery (Alberda), the wife of Guy, was a Taillebois before her marriage [128]; and about 1172 Guy was returned as owing military service to the Duke of Normandy for a knight's fee in the Bessin "pro alloetis Taillebois." [130] The last entry of her name in the Pipe Rolls is in 1213-4.

Reginald (IV) is proved by numerous documents to have been son of Guy and Aubrey, and was nephew (neposa) of Thomas. [131] He held a fee in Oxfordshire of Thomas in 1211-2 [132]; this may have been either Kingston or Ashwell Leigh (see below); his last payment on relief was in 1223-4 [133]

In 1229-30 he and his pledge were pardoned a fine of sixty marks for the seisin of Ashley, [134] which he had apparently lost through no fault of his own; he had subsequently Falk de Breauté for a term of the manor; on the rebellion and disgrace of this capable adventurer in 1221, the King seized Ashley, and gave it to his clerk, Henry de Cupella, to hold for the remainder of Falk's term [135]; while Henlow was assigned to Robert de Burevill. Reginald seems to have had some difficulty in recovering his manor; and made a grant [136] to the Monastery of St. Radewulf's of all his domain land at Kingston (with certain exceptions), for which the Canons gave him twenty marcs of silver "for the freeing of my land of Apsele and of Henlawe from the hand of Fulk," and to his wife one marc. Besides other grants to St. Frideswide of lands in Knighton, he granted to his (supposed) uncle, Henry de St. Walery certain lands in Asthall Leigh, co. Oxon., which the latter transferred to the Nunnery of Godstow.[160] Asthall Leigh, like Knighton, passed with the Honour of St. Walery to Richard, Earl of Cornwall[161]; and had been of Reginald's grandfather (Reginald II) in 1162-3.[162] He also made grants in Asthall Leigh to Bitlesden.[163]

It appears from a later roll that he had pledged Aspley and Henlow to the Jews,[164] and he parted with them in 1227 to Hubert de Burgh,[165] and others, who became responsible for the debt.[166] He made a further grant[167] to St. Frideswide, for which the Canons gave him twelve marcs of silver "to carry out my pilgrimage to the land of Jerusalem," and a mark to his wife. Since the entries of his name as of a living man in the Pipe Rolls cease after 1225-6, it may well be that he joined the Sixth Crusade in 1228. Of his wife Amirie (Anurie ?) nothing has been found beyond the name. By a later plea,[168] it is shown that he died without issue, and that his half-brother, Saer de Wahull was his heir.

The family of St. Walery must surely be among the oldest to have adopted a definite family cognizance or armorial bearing. As early as between 1144-51 Reginald (II) seems to have used a lion passant on his counterseal, asserting his royal cousinhood; Bernard (IV) carried two lions passant on both seal and secretum.[169] Thomas used two lions passant on his counterseal[170]; and according to Darsy,[171] when the third lion was added to the royal bearing of England,[172] adopted the proud motto, "Par ternis suppar"—Two are all but three! On the seals attached by Reginald (IV) to his charters to Bitlesden, already quoted, is also a lion, apparently rather rampant than passant.

For those names in the pedigree which are printed in italics, Darsy is alone responsible.

A LIST OF MEMBERS OF THE COURT. 31 HENRY VIII.

The members of the Court are divided into two sides, the King's and the Queen's.[123] Their names occupy folios 4B to 20B. Many of the names are found in the list of members of the Court, printed in "Ordinances and Regulations for the Government of the Royal Household" (for Society of Antiquaries, 1790); these are indicated by an asterisk, and a footnote is added if the individual holds a different position or if there is any material difference in spelling. The names of no ladies occur in the list of the Queen's side given in "Ordinances and Regulations." The fact is curious and significant. The Court of Catherine Parr, which is given in "Ordinances and Regulations," was evidently much smaller than that of the two previous queens, for whereas in the present MS. the allowance of messes of meat for the queen's ladies, gentlemen and chamberers is given as twenty-three, seven messes only are found in "Ordinances and Regulations." As apparently one mess was allowed for seven persons, it is obvious that the difference in the relative size of the establishments was very great.

Folios 2A to 4B, containing the "Bouche of Court," are not printed. (See Note 6.)

Henry married Anne in January 1540, and the marriage was annulled by Convocation July 9th following. He married Catherine nineteen days later, but the marriage was not acknowledged till August 8th.

MONUMENTAL AND OTHER INSCRIPTIONS IN THE CHURCH OF ABBEY DORE, CO. HEREFORD.

Contributed by George Marshall, F.S.A.

The Cistercian Abbey of Dore was founded in the parish of Bacton in the year 1147 by Robert de Ewyas, whose castle of Ewyas Harold was situated in the adjoining parish. Under the protection of this powerful lord and his successors, whose castle was one of the long chain guarding the Welsh Marches, the abbey quickly rose to a position of considerable opulence, and many of the nobility in the neighbourhood enriched it with endowments of land, and were buried within its walls. Among the chief benefactors to the abbey may be mentioned Robert de Ewyas the founder, and his son Robert; King John, who by a deed dated the 30th of July 1215, gave 500 acres in his forest of Trivel close to the abbey; Walter de Scudamore who gave a parcel of ground in the fourteenth year of the reign of King Stephen; Robert Earl Ferrers, Geoffrey de Genvyle and Walter de Clifford who gave lands, and John de Warre, Lord of Ewyas, who gave the advowson of Wyketoft in Lincolnshire in the fourth year of Edward III.

The building of the abbey must have commenced soon after its foundation, but it does not seem to have been completed before the time of Bishop Cantilupe, who consecrated it. Shortly before this, Bishop Aquablanca, in 1260, issued a hortatory letter granting twenty days' indulgence to those contributing to the fabric. The church consisted of a nave of nine bays, with narrow side aisles, and it was the vaulting of this portion of the church and an extension at the east end, which was probably in course of completion at this time. Only two columns with their arches at the east end of the nave remain above ground, but the foundations have been traced sufficiently to furnish an entire plan of this part of the building. The rest of the building, which forms the present church, consists of a north and south transept with eastern chapels, the crossing, and the presbytery surrounded by an ambulatory with five chapels at the eastern end. This is the only Cistercian presbytery in Britain where divine service is celebrated at the present day, and is a very beautiful specimen of Early English architecture. From its completion to the Reformation, the building seems to have undergone little change, except by the erection of the tower in the fifteenth century. At the dissolution the abbey passed into lay hands, and became a ruin, though it would appear that services were conducted in what remained of the church, for one John Gyles, curate, before the re-edification by Viscount Scudamore, "read prayers under an arch of the old demolished church to preserve his Prayer book from wett in rainy weather."

How and at what period Dore became a parish is not known. The abbey was founded in the parish of Bacton,[1] the advowson of which church the monks soon acquired. At the dissolution 50s. was reserved from the revenues of Dore and paid annually into the Augmentation

MONUMENTAL AND OTHER INSCRIPTIONS IN THE CHURCH OF ABBEY DORE, CO. HEREFORD.

The Cistercian Abbey of Dore was founded in the parish of Beston in the year 1147 by Robert de Ewyas, whose castle of Ewyas Harold was situated in the adjoining parish. Under the protection of this powerful lord and his successors, whose castle was one of the long chain guarding the Welsh Marches, the abbey quickly rose to a position of considerable opulence, and many of the nobility in the neighbourhood enriched it with endowments of land, and were buried within its walls. Among the chief benefactors to the abbey may be mentioned Robert de Ewyas the founder, and his son Roger; King John, who by a deed dated the 30th of July 1216, gave 300 acres in his forest of Trivel close to the abbey; Walter de Sandamore who gave a parcel of ground in the fourteenth year of the reign of King Stephen; Robert Earl Ferrers, Geoffrey de Genyle and Walter de Clifford who gave lands, and John de Warre, Lord of Ewyas, who gave the advowson of Wykefolk in Lincolnshire in the fourth year of Edward III.

The building of the abbey must have commenced soon after its foundation, but it does not seem to have been completed before the time of Bishop Cantilupe, who consecrated it. Shortly before this, Bishop Aquablanca, in 1290, issued a portatory letter granting twenty days' indulgence to those contributing to the fabric. The church consisted of a nave of nine bays, with narrow side aisles, and it was the vaulting of this portion of the church and an extension at the east end, which was probably in course of completion at this time. Only two columns with their arches at the east end of the nave remain above ground, but the foundations have been traced sufficiently to furnish an entire plan of this part of the building. The rest of the building, which forms the present church, consists of a north and south transept with eastern chapels, the crossing, and the presbytery surrounded by an ambulatory with five chapels at the eastern end. This is the only Cisterian presbytery in Britain where divine service is celebrated at the present day, and is a very beautiful specimen of Early English architecture. From its completion to the Reformation, the building seems to have undergone little change, except by the erection of the tower in the fifteenth century. At the dissolution the abbey passed into lay hands, and became a ruin, though it would appear that services were conducted in what remained of the church, for one John Gyles, curate, before the re-edification by Viscount Scudamore, "read prayers under an arch of the old demolished church to preserve his Prayer book from wett in rainy weather."

How and at what period Dore became a parish is not known. The abbey was founded in the parish of Beston,[1] the advowson of which church the monks soon acquired. At the dissolution 50s. was reserved from the revenues of Dore and paid annually into the Augmentation

[1] At the present time a rectory.

Office, and a similar sum was paid by this Office to a curate to read services at Dore. In 1552, when an inventory of church goods was made, Dore was returned as a parish and appears as well furnished with vestments, bells, etc., so that probably the parish of Dore was carved out of that of Bacton, by some arrangement before the dissolution. However this may be, the sum of 50s. per annum was quite inadequate to supply the spiritual requirements of the parishioners of Dore or to enable any portion of the monastic church to be maintained in a fit condition in which to celebrate divine service. At this juncture, Viscount Scudamore, of Holme Lacy, who had inherited the great tithes and the monastic buildings, decided to restore the tithes to the use of the Church and re-edify the building. Having obtained a license in mortmain from Charles I, dated 6th December 1632, he entered into contracts with Francis Stretton, of Fownhope, mason, to do the plastering and whitening of the roofs and walls, and with John Abel, carpenter, to re-roof the building and to do sundry other timber work; and he erected a carved altar, screen, pews, and gallery, no doubt all the work of John Abel. At the same time, the arch leading from the nave to the crossing was walled in and the tower repaired.[2] The whole work was completed and the church consecrated with great ceremony and a special form of service on Palm Sunday, 1635, it being Lord Scudamore's birthday. The church as repaired and furnished by Scudamore is in nearly every respect the church as it exists to-day, with the exception of the carved altar-piece, which has disappeared.

The oldest monuments now existing in the church are two effigies of the latter half of the twelfth or early thirteenth century. The earlier, a mutilated recumbent effigy in stone, now lies in the south ambulatory. The head is detached from the body, and the portion below the knees is missing, but when complete must have been about 7 feet 6 inches in length; what remains is 6 feet long, and rests on a rectangular slab 2 feet 9 inches across. The figure is clad in coif with fillet, hawberk, chausses and gloves of ring mail. The right hand grips the pommel of a sword which is attached by a baldrick passing over the thighs, and twice round the scabbard of the sword, and buckled low down. The left hand rests on the breast beneath a large heater-shaped shield suspended from the shoulder by a guige. Over the coat of mail is a long surcoat reaching below the knees and split up the front. Tradition assigns this monument to Robert de Ewyas, the founder of the abbey. The other effigy is now placed in the north ambulatory. The portion from a little way below the knees is missing except one fragment; what remains measures 5 feet 6 inches, and rests on a tapering slab 2 feet 6 inches across the top and 2 feet 2 inches across the fracture. The head reposes on a square cushion placed

[2] It has generally been accepted that Scudamore entirely built the tower, but the late Mr. Thomas Blashill called attention to the fact that certain characters about it point to its being of earlier date than Scudamore's time, and in further corroboration of this, Dore is returned in the inventory of church goods, in 1552, as possessing four bells, so that a tower of some kind must have been in existence at this date, and there is no record or indication of any other tower than the present one having existed.

Office, and a similar sum was paid by this Office to a curate to read services at Dore. In 1583, when an inventory of church goods was made, Dore was returned as a parish and appears as well furnished with vestments, bells, etc., so that probably the parish of Dore was carved out of that of Bacton, by some arrangement before the dissolution. The church as repaired and furnished by Scudamore is in nearly every respect the church as it exists to-day, with the exception of the carved altar-piece, which has disappeared.

diagonally, and the legs are crossed. The figure is clad in a coif with fillet threaded at the sides through the rings of the armour, hawberk chausses, and gloves of ring mail, and a long surcoat fastened at the waist with a belt and buckle. The right hand grasps the hilt, and the left hand rests open on the scabbard of a sword placed diagonally across the body, and over the left arm is a large shield. This figure is said to represent Roger de Clifford, who married in 1211 Sibilla, the grand-daughter and heiress of Robert de Ewyas, the founder.

In the south ambulatory are two coffin-lids, one with an ornamental cross and over the lower part a shield, much worn, bearing what appear to be five bars; the other is plain but for a cross within a small circle at the head and foot,[3] and a modern inscription (No. 42). There were two other fine cross slabs in the ruins of the nave in the eighteenth century,[4] but both have now disappeared; one with a shield with a fess between two chevrons, possibly commemorating some of the Bretons, and another of similar workmanship with six small shields all blank and the stem of the cross thrust down the throat of what seems to be a salamander or lizard.

Formerly there was an effigy in oak in the south ambulatory, said to commemorate Caducanus, Bishop of Bangor, who on resigning his see in 1236 became a monk of Dore and died in 1241.[5] This effigy, which was quite perfect in 1727 except the top of the pastoral staff, had disappeared in 1807.

Leland, who visited the abbey shortly before the dissolution, and apparently obtained his information with regard to it from Abbot Cleobury, whom he styled "a profound antiquary," tells us there were buried within its walls, Matilda de Bohun, wife to Sir Robert Burnelle, founder of Buildwas Abbey, in the presbytery; Sir Robert Ewyas, the founder of Dore, and his son Robert; William Grandison,[6] and Sybilla his wife; Sir Richard Hompton, Lord of Bakenton; Caducanus, Bishop of Bangor and afterwards a monk of Dore; Sir Roger Clifford, the younger and the elder, Lords of Canterceley and Brointlese Castle; Sir Alane Plokenet,[7] Lord of Kilpeck Castle, on whose tomb these verses were engraved:—

> "Ultimus Alanus de Plonkenet hic tumulatur > Nobilis, urbanus, vermibus esca datur";

John Bruton (i.e. Breton), knight, and his wife, father to John Bruton, Bishop of Hereford (No. 43); and some of the Botears.

A general restoration of the church was commenced in 1901, and the floor was relaid on a concrete foundation, but the monumental stones were carefully replaced in their original positions. The inscriptions

[5] Gibson, in his View of the Churches of Door, Home-Lacy and Hempsted, 1727, is the only authority for this, and he "supposed" the figure to be that of Caducanus; more probably it was the effigy of one of the abbots, but if of Bishop Caducanus it is the earliest recorded instance of a wooden effigy in Great Britain.

In the south ambulatory are two coffin-lids, one with an ornamental cross and over the lower part a shield, much worn, bearing what appear to be five bars; the other is plain but for a cross within a small circle at the head and foot,[2] and a modern inscription (No. 12). There were two other fine cross slabs in the ruins of the nave in the eighteenth century,[3] but both have now disappeared; one with a shield with a less between two chevrons, possibly commemorating some of the Bretons, and another of similar workmanship with six small shields all blank and the stem of the cross thrust down the throat of what seems to be a salamander or lizard.

Formerly there was an effigy in oak in the south ambulatory, said to commemorate Gadeonus, Bishop of Bangor, who on resigning his see in 1230[4] became a monk of Dore and died in 1241.[5] This effigy, which was quite perfect in 1727 except the top of the pastoral staff, had disappeared in 1807.

Jeland, who visited the abbey shortly before the dissolution, and apparently obtained his information with regard to it from Abbot Cleobury, whom he styled "a profound antiquary," tells us there were buried within its walls, Matilda de Hoton, wife to Sir Robert Burnelle, founder of Buildwas Abbey, in the presbytery; Sir Robert Ivywas, the founder of Dore, and his son Robert; William Grandison,[6] and Sybilla his wife; Sir Richard Hompton, lord of Bakenton; Gadeanus, Bishop of Bangor and afterwards a monk of Dore; Sir Roger Clifford, the younger and the elder, Lords of Canteresley and Frontaleee Castle; Sir Alisne Pichonet,[7] Lord of Kilpeck Castle, on whose tomb these verses were engraved:—

John Breton (i.e. Breton), knight, and his wife, father to John Breton, Bishop of Hereford (No. 13); and some of the Botevers.

Defective inscriptions, or those composed of initials only, have been made good as far as possible from the Parish Registers, and where these were missing (1687-1723 inclusive) from the Bishop's Transcripts at Hereford.

My best thanks are due to J. Paul Rylands, Esq., F.S.A., for the many hours he spent in assisting me to copy these inscriptions, and also words in transcribing them, and identifying the numerous armorial bearings which occur within the church.

THE CHRONICLE OF LANERCOST, 1272—1346, translated with notes by the Right Hon. Sir Herbert Maxwell, Baronet. Glasgow (James Maclehose and Sons).

This translation of the Chronicon de Lanercost is most welcome in its present form, with illustrations and index. The original manuscript in the British Museum, edited in 1839 by the late Joseph Stevenson, begins with the year 1201, but Sir Herbert Maxwell has selected only a part, the period from the commencement of the reign of Edward I to 1346, when the Chronicle ends. This period is chosen as being "of perennial interest to Scotsmen," but if a selection was necessary, and we regret that the whole has not been translated for us,

The Chronicle of Lanercost, 1272—1346, translated with notes by the Right Hon. Sir Herbert Maxwell, Baronet. Glasgow (James Maclehose and Sons).

This translation of the Chronicon de Lanercost is most welcome in its present form, with illustrations and index. The original manuscript in the British Museum, edited in 1839 by the late Joseph Stevenson, begins with the year 1201, but Sir Herbert Maxwell has selected only a part, the period from the commencement of the reign of Edward I to 1346, when the Chronicle ends. This period is chosen as being "of personal interest to Scotsmen," but it a selection was necessary, and we regret that the whole has not been translated for us, it might have been expected to begin with the untimely death of "The Maid of Norway" in 1290. However, we are glad to have another eighteen years thrown in. The question of the authorship of the Chronicle is ably handled by the Reverend James Wilson, who disagrees with Stevenson's view that it was written by a Minorite Friar of Carlisle, and argues in favour of the tradition that it emanated from the Priory of Lanercost. It seems in either case to have been the work of several scribes. "The Poet of the Chronicle," Henry de Burgh, who may have been one of them (footnote, page 23), was, it is contended, canon and afterwards prior. His verses are admirably turned into English poetry by Sir Herbert, who very properly gives the original stanzas in footnotes. In one of them, by the way, occurs a misprint, Christum should read Christus (p. 333, line 14). These footnotes contain also annotations to the text, and more might have been done in that direction. For instance, to take one individual of importance, no information is given about "Bovo de Clare," whose death is recorded in 1294 (p. 109), and to whose misdeeds allusion is made. Bogo, or rather Bevis, de Clare, canon and treasurer of York Minster, was a brother of Gilbert, Earl of Gloucester, who died in 1295. Sir Herbert omits in his translation that this Bevis's death occurred in London, and does not in our opinion render very happily the passage "solemnis nomine, sed non conversatione." Bevis de Clare certainly bore an illustrious name, but can solemnis be translated "illustrious"? It is more likely that the chronicler wished to convey that this shady canon's behaviour was not in keeping with his solemn calling. With regard to another passage in Stevenson's edition, reading "Erat vero David tantæ familiaritatis apud regem ut vice magni David apud achis custos capitis ejus deputaretur," Sir Herbert remarks (p. 33) that "vice magni David apud achis" is unintelligible and translates it "in place of the great David ap Udachis"! This is particularly unfortunate, as reference to the Scriptures would have shown him that the chronicler merely compares David ap Gruffydd's appointment as guardian of the King's head with that of King David by the King of Gath, "And Achish said to David, Therefore will I make thee keeper of mine head for ever" (1 Samuel xxviii, 2). One other criticism we have to make is the inconsistency of rendering the prefix "de" to a surname as "de," "of" or sometimes omitting it altogether. Here we have instances quite bewildering. Members of the great Douglas family appear as Sir Archibald Douglas, Sir Archibald de Douglas (p. 280, where his death at Halidon Hill is recorded, but omitted in the index), Sir James of Douglas, and Sir William of Douglas and de Douglas. On one page (281) we have John de Ross, Robert of Greystanes, Richard de Bury, and John of Kirkby, all ecclesiastics; the last mentioned who was Bishop of Carlisle, 1332—1353, we may point out is united in the index with John of Kirkeby who died in 1290. It seems high time that some consistent principle should be adopted by authoritative writers in regard to this question.

Gwiniune should read Gwenna (p. 333, line 14). These footnotes contain also annotations to the text, and more might have been done in that direction. For instance, to take one individual of importance, no information is given about "Rove de Clare," whose death is recorded in 1291 (p. 109), and to whose misdeeds allusion is made. Rogo, or rather Revis, de Clare, canon and treasurer of York Minster, was a brother of Gilbert, Earl of Gloucester, who died in 1295. Sir Herbert omits in his translation that this Revis's death occurred in London, and does not in our opinion render very happily the passage "solemnis nomine, sed non conversatione." Revis de Clare certainly bore an illustrious name, but can scarcely be translated "illustrious"! It is more likely that the chronicler wished to convey that this shady canon's behaviour was not in keeping with his solemn calling. With regard to another passage in Stevenson's edition, reading "Sed vero David tunc familiaritatis apud regem et vice magni David apud nobis cuncta capitis ejus deputaverat," Sir Herbert remarks (p. 33) that "vice magni David apud nobis" is untranslatable and translates it "in place of the great David up Tilaedis"! This is particularly unfortunate, as reference to the Scriptures would have shown him that the chronicler merely compares David ap Gruffydd's appointment as guardian of the King's head with that of King David by the King of Goth, "And Adebah said to David, Therefore will I make thee keeper of mine head for ever" (1 Samuel xxviii. 2). One other criticism we have to make is the inconsistency of rendering the prefix "de" to a surname as "de," "of" or sometimes omitting it altogether. Here we have instances quite bewildering. It seems high time that some consistent principle should be adopted by authoritative writers in regard to this question.

ALUMNI CARTHUSIANI, a Record of the Foundation Scholars of Charterhouse 1614—1872. Edited by Bower Marsh, B.A., and Frederick Arthur Crisp, F.S.A. (Privately printed.)

A complete list of the Gownboys admitted to the Charterhouse would of itself have been of great interest, but we have here quite a model School Register, for the career of each student has been followed whenever possible, and in nearly every case information has been supplied which will be of the greatest service to genealogists. It should be understood that only the scholars on the Foundation are included in this Register, and it has nothing to do with the "town boys" or "boarders." It must have taken much time and infinite pains to collect so many facts relating to old Carthusians, and in the Preface we are told that "often most time has been spent over a name against which the record is blank." The first portion of the work, from 1613 to 1680, has been mainly based on the "Assembly Books" of the Governors, which are fortunately in existence from the commencement of the School to the present day. In these books the parentage of the scholars is not given, so that the Editors have been obliged to depend upon other sources of information where they have been able to obtain it, and they have also had to correct numerous errors in the spelling of names, such as "Wm. Standlee" for Winstanley, and "Crosshow" for Crashaw. In 1680 the Admission Register of the School commences and continues to 1818; this is a record of great value and has been transcribed verbatim. Here the age of the boys at their admission is always given, but not the parentage or date and place of baptism until 1724, when these important particulars begin to be recorded. For the third portion from 1818 to 1833, use has been made of the Warrant Books, in which the nomination warrants directed by the Governors to the Master and Registrars of the Hospital were recorded. For the last period, 1833 to 1872, an Admission Book, compiled from these Warrant Books, is the authority. In the compilation of their valuable biographical notes the editors have been greatly assisted by the Matriculation Registers of the Universities, for a considerable proportion of the gownboys found their way there by means of the exhibitions provided for the scholars, and became clergymen. A large collection of apprentice bonds in the possession of the Charterhouse authorities has been examined for the purposes of this work, and has proved a fruitful source of information. The facts gleaned from these bonds will be of especial use to genealogists, for the boys thus apprenticed were frequently related to the masters to whom they were bound. Relationship also often existed between a Governor and his nominee, though it is not always apparent, being either very remote or through the patron's wife. Godfathers also found nomination to the Charterhouse a convenient way of fulfilling their sponsorial responsibilities. Faithful servants of royalty eagerly contended on behalf of their sons and other relatives for the scholars' places in the gift of the Crown, and in the Preface to this Register many of their petitions are quoted from the State Papers. King Charles II was no doubt glad thus cheaply to reward the loyalty of his father's devoted adherents, and among

King Charles II was no doubt glad thus cheaply to reward the loyalty of his father's devoted adherents, and among his nominees are two sons of Sir Anthony St. Leger, Colonel of Horse in the time of the Rebellion, one of whom, Seaford Gibson St. Leger, was subsequently expelled by the Governors for "bad carriage and behaviour." Among the gownboys who acquired celebrity in after years were John Wesley, Sir Richard Steele, Sir William Blackstone, and the first Lord Ellenborough. A few of the students were of French and probably of Huguenot origin, as John Peter Allix, afterwards Dean of Gloucester, and Ely; Peter, son of Peter de la Fontan, of Vendôme, and Edward Amyand de Graves. At least two scholars, William Wallis, admitted 1648-9 (p. 19) and Benjamin Goodwyn (p. 53) were connected with America, as was probably also John Knighton (p. 74). To modern ideas it seems curious to find on p. 87 a scion of the ancient Devonshire family of Northcote, and grandson of a baronet, apprenticed to a London periwig-maker in 1730.

At the end of the volume will be found a list of the Governors, with references to the pages of the work where their presentations are recorded; also lists of the preachers, schoolmasters, ushers and readers, many of whom had themselves been gownboys; presentations to Charterhouse livings, and, most important of all, a complete general index. As with all books which issue from Mr. Crisp's press, the printing is excellent, and the misprints very few. The only illustration is a facsimile of the Warrant of the Duke of Buckingham, nominating John Wesley to the Foundation.

MEMORIALS OF AN ANCIENT HOUSE: A HISTORY OF THE FAMILY OF LISTER OR LYSTER. By the Rev. H. L. Lyster Denny. Printed for the Author by Ballantyne Hanson & Co., Edinburgh, 1913.

This book is an admirable example of what may be accomplished by an enthusiastic genealogist in his spare time. Mr. Denny in sixteen years has got together a mass of information about his mother's family and has quite rightly decided to print it, though realising that further research is necessary for completeness and accuracy, and recognising that some of the authorities he relies on are "partly erroneous, at any rate." The pedigree begins with a John Lyster, of Derby, living 1312, said to have been a son of Sir Thomas Lyster, of Derby, Knt., living 1284, and his descendants are very fully traced in the male and female lines, in many instances down to the present time. They include Marquesses, Earls, a present Lord of Appeal, and among Commoners the Dean of St. Paul's and several other well known public men. Very interesting biographical notices of the many distinguished members of the family are quoted and there are several pedigrees of the female ascents, particularly in the numerous cases where Royal Descents are included. In an appendix of some ninety pages the author gives particulars of various families whom he cannot connect with the main line, though it seems probable that in some cases it ought not to be difficult to do so, and in addition prints many miscellaneous notes which will undoubtedly be of use to any interested in families of Lister. Some of the authorities relied on are not satisfactory from a strict point of view. A family pedigree drawn up about 1745 cannot be considered as good

Some of the authorities relied on are not satisfactory from a strict point of view. A family pedigree drawn up about 1743 cannot be considered as good evidence of what occurred in the fourteenth century, and it seems doubtful if Mr. J. H. Round is content for the "Landed Gentry" to be quoted as the authority for his pedigree. The arrangement of the book leaves nothing to be desired, and a recent entry in the first column of the "Morning Post" was at once identified by the excellent index. The illustrations include first rate reproductions of some seventy-seven family portraits from various private collections, coats of arms, book-plates, etc. The book is indispensable to any one interested in the family, but a very considerable amount of original research is requisite before many of the pedigrees can be considered as adequately proved.

Coronation Studies: The Great Gold Spurs. By Arthur Betts. (Published by the Author at 50, Bedford Row, W.C.)

These are three articles, reprinted in pamphlet form from "The Juridical Review" (Edinburgh and London), dealing with the office or service of carrying the Great Spurs at a Coronation. In the first and third articles the author deals with the origin and descent of the right, and these should perhaps be read together. The second article is largely concerned with the question whether the Coronation ceremony in this country is derived from the French ritual, or whether both took their origin from a still more ancient Saxon order, and seems to have less bearing on the question of the Spurs. It can hardly be said that any of the articles add greatly to existing knowledge. In the third number, entitled "The Descent of the Customary Right," the author sets out to refute the theory, advanced by Mr. Round, that the office or service was attached to the Marshalship, and to prove that it was vested in the Marshall family in fee. This latter contention was advanced on behalf of the Earl of Loudoun before the Court of Claims in 1911, and adopted by the judgment of the Court. The shorthand minutes of evidence in that case have been printed and the present article adds nothing to what was there dealt with in great detail. In his first article, entitled "Coheiresses," the author is evidently impressed with the difficulties which undoubtedly exist in reconciling any theory which has hitherto been advanced with the facts, or with the resolution of the Committee for Privileges of the House of Lords in the Great Chamberlain case. These difficulties may be summed up in two questions. If the office or service was one in fee (1) Why, at the Coronation of Edward II., did a collateral male bear them in preference to the direct representative through the female line? (2) Why was the representative of a younger sister and coheir ultimately accorded the right to the extinction (apparently) of the rights of the other coheirs? The author thinks that at the Coronation of Edward II. the hereditary nature of the right may not have been firmly established. He disposes of the second difficulty by assuming, or arguing, that the rules of descent enunciated in the Great Chamberlain case applied to that case alone, and that claims to Coronation Services, and in particular to the Spurs, are governed by other laws and precedents. His argument is not entirely convincing. A study of the printed minutes of evidence in the Great Chamberlain evidence of what occurred in the fourteenth century, and it seems doubtful if Mr. J. H. Round is content for the "landed Gentry" to be quoted as the authority for his pedigree. His argument is not entirely convincing. A study of the printed minutes of evidence in the Great Chamberlain case shews that the Committee for Privileges laid down the common law rule of descent and applied it to the office. An attempt, made in the Great Spurs case before the Court of Claims in 1911, to distinguish between the two cases in order to establish the jus esneciae, or right of the eldest daughter, failed. No doubt the long series of decisions in favour of a particular line of descent, as the author suggests, carried weight, and other arguments, which he does not notice, might be adduced to support those decisions and doubtless influenced the Court in 1911. While on the whole carefully prepared, certain inaccuracies call for comment. The statement that "Services at Coronations" are "subject to the approval of the King, who may appoint whomsoever he will to perform such services" is misleading. The Sovereign may dispense with any service, but if it is performed he must accept the service of the person (if any) legally entitled to perform it. Again the author is not happy in his attempt to support Dugdale's account of the descent of the Irish branch of the Marshall family. Dugdale's error is well known, in that he makes William to be the son of John instead of his brother. In support of Dugdale the author quotes two entries from the rolls, both of which in terms prove that learned writer's mistake! Such errors detract from the value of the articles, which, however, show research, and may be read with interest as bearing on a case which presents much legal and historical lore.

Genealogical Abstracts of Wills proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. Register "Wotton," 1658. Volume VI. By William Brigg, B.A. (Privately printed for the Subscribers.)

It is to be feared that these valuable genealogical abstracts are not as well known as they ought to be, for otherwise Mr. Brigg's volumes would appear at more frequent intervals. That adequate support should not be accorded to useful work of this kind is not creditable to genealogists, and we trust that the list of subscribers may soon increase. It may be as well to repeat that each abstract contains the name of every legatee mentioned in a will, and all relationships are noted. It is well known that in the original register books the wills of persons dying in the same diocese are often at this period grouped together, and in this volume Kent, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire are largely represented. Among the most interesting wills here abstracted are those of John Stanley, clerk, who mentions many divines; Elizabeth Gray, or Grey, of Morpeth, daughter of Sir Edward Grey, which will interest northern antiquaries, and Thomas Darcy, a bencher of Lincoln's Inn, who refers to the ancient tombs and brasses to his ancestors at Maldon in Essex. References will also be found to New England and Virginia.

Again the author is not happy in his attempt to support Dugdale's account of the descent of the Irish branch of the Marshall family. Dugdale's error is well known, in that he makes William to be the son of John instead of his brother. In support of Dugdale the author quotes two entries from the rolls, both of which in terms prove that learned writer's mistake! Such errors detract from the value of the articles, which, however, show research, and may be read with interest as bearing on a case which presents much legal and historical lore.

GENEALOGICAL ABSTRACTS OF WILLS PROVED IN THE PECULIAR COURT OF CANTERBURY. Register "Wotton," 1658. Volume VI. By William Brigg, B.A. (Privately printed for the Subscribers.)

It is to be feared that these valuable genealogical abstracts are not as well known as they ought to be, for otherwise Mr. Brigg's volumes would appear at more frequent intervals. That adequate support should not be accorded to useful work of this kind is not creditable to genealogists, and we trust that the list of subscribers may soon increase. It may be as well to repeat that each abstract contains the name of every legatee mentioned in a will, and all relationships are noted. It is well known that in the original register books the wills of persons dying in the same diocese are often at this period grouped together, and in this volume Kent, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire are largely represented. Among the most interesting wills here abstracted are those of John Stanley, clerk, who mentions many divines; Elizabeth Gray, or Grey, of Morpeth, daughter of Sir Edward Grey, which will interest northern antiquaries, and Thomas Darcy, a benefactor of Lincoln's Inn, who refers to the ancient tombs and brasses to his ancestors at Maldon in Essex. References will also be found to New England and Virginia.

PEDIGREE OF SIR CHARLES BARROW, BART., OF HIGHGROVE, MINSTERWORTH, CO. GLOUCESTER.

Mr. Arthur William Crawley-Boevey, the writer of the following article, died, to our great regret, on the 9th of July last. He was a younger son of the late Sir Martin Hyde Crawley-Boevey, fourth Bart., of Flaxley Abbey, co. Gloucester, and was born 12 August 1845. He entered the Bombay Civil Service in 1868, retiring in 1893. In 1898 he published through Messrs. Longman a very interesting family history, entitled "The Perverse Widow, and Memorials of the Boevey Family," and this work proves him to have been an accurate and painstaking genealogist. He was buried at Flaxley on Saturday, 12 July.

The correction of the proof sheets of this article has been undertaken by the Editor.

No complete pedigree of the ancient family of BEREWE, or BARROW, of Awre, co. Gloucester, has ever been printed since the Gloucestershire Visitation of 1623 was published by the Harleian Society in vol. xxi of 1885. That Visitation, edited by the late Sir John Maclean, F.S.A., and Mr. W. C. Heane, contains a good deal of later matter bearing on the history of this family; but it is obviously incomplete, and furnishes no explanation of the connection of Sir Charles Barrow with the Barrows, or Berewes of Awre.

The late Mr. George E. Cokayne, Clarenceux King of Arms, was consulted by the present writer regarding this alleged connection, and he informed him in reply as follows:—

"The only pedigree of Barrow, Bart., is in 'Baronets,' vol. i, p. 1, "(Heralds' College), going up to his great grandfather, 'Thomas' "Barrow of Awre, co. Glouc., living 1641.

"He (Sir Charles Barrow), then aged 76, made oath, 10 December "1783, that the said Thomas was, he verily believes, a lineal descendant "and heir male of the family of Berow (sic), seated at Awre aforesaid "for several generations prior to the Heralds' Visitation of the said "County Glouc., 1623, in which the said family appears registered. "Arms and crest of that family allowed to him."

The tabular pedigree of Berow, or Berewe, extracted from this Visitation, with additions from other sources, was reprinted by the present writer in his work entitled The Perverse Widow, and Memorials of the Boevey Family, p. 286. The same work contains a tabular and narrative pedigree of Sir Charles Barrow, containing all the information known at the time both to Mr. Cokayne and himself (pp. 287-8, et seq.).

Since this book was published, efforts have been made for some years past to establish the connection of Sir Charles Barrow with the Visitation pedigree referred to. This enquiry has proved difficult owing

PEDIGREE OF SIR CHARLES BARROW, BART., OF HIGHGROVE, MINSTERWORTH, CO. GLOUCESTER.

Mr. Arthur William Crawley-Boevey, the writer of the following article, died, to our great regret, on the 9th of July last. He was buried at Flaxley on Saturday, 12 July.

The correction of the proof sheets of this article has been undertaken by the Editor.

No complete pedigree of the ancient family of Barrow, or Barrow, of Awre, co. Gloucester, has ever been printed since the Gloucestershire Visitation of 1623 was published by the Harleian Society in vol. xxi of 1885. That Visitation, edited by the late Sir John Maclean, F.S.A., and Mr. W. C. Heane, contains a good deal of later matter bearing on the history of this family; but it is obviously incomplete, and furnishes no explanation of the connection of Sir Charles Barrow with the Barrows, or Barrowes of Awre.

The late Mr. George R. Colayne, Clarenceux King of Arms, was consulted by the present writer regarding this alleged connection, and he informed him in reply as follows:—

"The only pedigree of Barrow, Bart., is in 'Baronets,' vol. i, p. 1, "(Heralds' College), going up to his great grandfather, 'Thomas' "Barrow of Awre, co. Glouc., living 1611.

"He (Sir Charles Barrow), then aged 76, made oath, 10 December "1783, that the said Thomas was, he verily believes, a lineal descendant "and heir male of the family of Berow (sic), seated at Awre aforesaid "for several generations prior to the Heralds' Visitation of the said "County Glouc., 1623, in which the said family appears registered. "Arms and crest of that family allowed to him."

The tabular pedigree of Berow, or Berowe, extracted from this Visitation, with additions from other sources, was reprinted by the present writer in his work entitled 'The Perverse Widow, and Memorials of the Boevey Family,' p. 286. The same work contains a tabular and narrative pedigree of Sir Charles Barrow, containing all the information known at the time both to Mr. Colayne and himself (pp. 287-8, et seq.).

Since this book was published, efforts have been made for some years past to establish the connection of Sir Charles Barrow with the Visitation pedigree referred to. This enquiry has proved difficult owing to the scanty nature of the evidence available. The extracts from the Bishop's Transcript of the Parish Register of Awre relating to the Berewe (Barrow) family, and printed with the Visitation pedigree by the Harleian Society, extend only from 1670 to 1693. And no wills have yet been discovered for several of the principal members of the family.

Within the last few months the writer has been able, with the Vicar's assistance, to procure from the original parish register of Awre a great deal of new information, and to clear up the chief point, viz., the parentage of Thomas Barrow of Awre, "living 1641," who was alleged by Sir Charles Barrow to be his great-grandfather.

It will be observed that the Visitation pedigree of Berewe contains only one Thomas, who was the son of James Berewe and Catherine Boulton, his second wife. The parish register of Awre shows that "Thomas, the son of James Berrow, Esq.," was baptised there on 18 March 1593. The same register records the fact that "Thomas Berow was buried 13 February 1665." As there was only one Thomas in the Visitation pedigree, there can be no reasonable doubt that both entries relate to one and the same person. This Thomas was alleged to be living "in 1641," the same year in which his half-brother, Edmund, of Field Court, died. Mr. Cokayne expressed to the writer his opinion that Sir Charles Barrow's reference to the year 1641 probably pointed to some will or other public document, proving the fact that Thomas was alive at that date. But no will has been discovered, either of this Edmund, son of James Berewe, bur. 29 November 1641, nor of his father James, died 2 Feb. 1605-6, nor of Edmund's son and heir, Capt. John Berewe, bur. 16 April 1682. Search has been made without result for wills of these persons, both at Gloucester and in the P.C.C. in London.

This Thomas Barrow is said to have married twice, and to have had besides other children, a son Thomas, who was Sir Charles Barrow's grandfather, and whose domestic history is perfectly well known. Where Thomas Barrow the elder lived is not known, nor the names of his two wives, nor where his children were born or baptised.

The parish register of Awre throws no light on any of these points, but it establishes the fact that a second Thomas, residing at Hayes in Awre, was buried there as "Capt. Thomas Barrow, Esq." (sic) on 6 June 1683. Although there is at present no distinct evidence to confirm the filiation, there can be no reasonable doubt that this second Thomas was, as alleged by Sir Charles Barrow, the son of the elder Thomas, who died in 1665, and was buried at Awre. The remainder of the pedigree is quite clear and speaks for itself.

It will be seen from the narrative pedigree following, that important new light has been thrown on the domestic history of the Barrow (Berewe) family by the recent examination of the original parish register of Awre. The Awre extracts printed as notes to the Visitation pedigree in Harl. Soc., vol. xxi, were taken from the Bishop's Transcript at Gloucester. These extracts are obviously incomplete and cover only a small period of the family history; and even as regards the

to the scanty nature of the evidence available. The extracts from the Bishop's Transcript of the Parish Register of Awre relating to the Borowe (Barrow) family, and printed with the Visitation pedigree by the Harleian Society, extend only from 1670 to 1693. And no wills have yet been discovered for several of the principal members of the family.

Within the last few months the writer has been able, with the Vicar's assistance, to procure from the original parish register of Awre a great deal of new information, and to clear up the chief point, viz., the parentage of Thomas Barrow of Awre, "living 1611," who was alleged by Sir Charles Barrow to be his great-grandfather.

It will be observed that the Visitation pedigree of Borowe contains only one Thomas, who was the son of James Borowe and Catherine Bonifon, his second wife. The parish register of Awre shows that "Thomas, the son of James Barrow, Esq.," was baptised there on 18 March 1593. The same register records the fact that "Thomas Barrow was buried 13 February 1693." As there was only one Thomas in the Visitation pedigree, there can be no reasonable doubt that both entries relate to one and the same person. This Thomas was alleged to be living "in 1611," the same year in which his half-brother, Edmund, of Field Court, died. Mr. Colquhoun expressed to the writer his opinion that Sir Charles Barrow's reference to the year 1611 probably pointed to some will or other public document, proving the fact that Thomas was alive at that date. But no will has been discovered, either of this Edmund, son of James Borowe, bur. 29 November 1611, nor of his father James, died 2 Feb. 1605-6, nor of Edmund's son and heir, Capt. John Borowe, bur. 16 April 1682. Search has been made without result for wills of these persons, both at Gloucester and in the P.C.C. in London.

The remainder of the pedigree is quite clear and speaks for itself.

It will be seen from the narrative pedigree following, that important new light has been thrown on the domestic history of the Barrow (Borowe) family by the recent examination of the original parish register of Awre. The Awre extracts printed as notes to the Visitation pedigree in Harl. Soc., vol. xxi, were taken from the Bishop's Transcript at Gloucester. These extracts are obviously incomplete and cover only a small period of the family history; and even as regards the period covered (1670 to 1693) these printed extracts, when compared with those now furnished from the original register, are not entirely accurate or complete. The pedigree now furnished makes important additions to the Visitation pedigree, and establishes with reasonable certainty the main point of public interest, viz., the connection of the late Sir Charles Barrow with that Visitation family. Some time or another, when all the Gloucestershire Marriages have been printed for public information, we may be able to discover the names of the first Thomas Berewe's two wives, married presumably between 1618, when Thomas was of marriageable age, and 1665, when he died. This discovery would supply the most important omission in the present Barrow (Berewe) pedigree. The Awre extracts, furnished by the Vicar include some persons of the same name who may or may not be connected.

Sir Charles Barrow, Bart., was a person of some local distinction in his own day. Born (according to his own statement at the Heralds' College in 1783) in 1707, in the Island of St. Christopher (St. Kitts), where his father, Charles Barrow, was a West Indian merchant, he was subsequently well known in his own county of Gloucester as Recorder of Tewkesbury, and as M.P. for the city of Gloucester in seven successive Parliaments. He was a friend and warm supporter of Charles James Fox, and was in 1783, during the Premiership of Lord North, created a baronet, with remainder to his nearest kinsman by marriage, Thomas Crawley-Boevey, Esq., of Flaxley Abbey, co. Gloucester. Eleanor Barrow, his first cousin, and the last surviving member of the Barrow family, married the Rev. Thomas Savage, Rector of Standish, co. Gloucester. Their daughter, Ann Savage, married Thomas Crawley-Boevey aforesaid, who succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of Sir Charles Barrow, 10 January 1789, as related in G.E.C.'s Complete Baronetage.

NARRATIVE PEDIGREE OF BERKEWE, OR BARROW, OF AWRE, CO. GLOUCESTER.

From Gloucestershire Visitation of 1623, with additions. The original spelling of this Visitation has generally been followed.

I. WALTER BERKEWE married Elizabeth DERRENTOST, dau. and heire to Thomas Derrentost, and had issue a son—

II. John Berkewe, of Bere, in Cow. Gloster, who mar. Jone (Joan) HARPERTON, d. and heire of John Harfield, of Harfield. They had issue, a son—

III. RICHARD BARROWE, who mar. Jone (Joan) HAWKINS, d. and heire of Richard Hawkins. Richard Barowe was buried at Quedgeley, co. Gloucester, 6 March 1664, according to the register of that parish. His monumental inscription in the parish church of Quedgeley records his death as occurring on 22 March 1662. The parish register furnishes probably the correct year of Richard's death and burial. They had issue—

1. Edmund Berewe (IV).
2. Antony Berewe, named in wills of brothers Roger (1566) and Edmund (1570).
3. James Berewe, named in will of brother Roger in 1566.
4. Henry Berewe, also named in same will ; aged 36 " and more " in 1567. Next heir to brother Roger.

IV. Edmund Berewe, eldest son of Richard Berewe (No. III), was of ffelcombe, als. ffelcourt, and was bur. in the Lady Chapel, Awre, 22 August 1570 (P.R.). His will was proved at Gloucester, 30 September 1570. His Inq. p.m. (copy appended) was taken at Cirencester, 18 September 1570. He married Frances, daughter of James Clifford, of Frampton, in Com. Glo'ster, and had issue, four sons and four daughters :—

1. James, eldest son (V).
2. Edward.
3. John.
4. Richard.

1. Margaret, mar. John Sternhold, 4 October 1570 ; and secondly, Henry Triffett, 21 October 1582. Both marriages are recorded in the Awre Parish Register.
2. Eleanor, mar. John Nicholls, 8 October 1570. (Quedgeley Parish Register.)
3. Elizabeth.
4. Mary.

V. James Berewe, eldest son of Edmund Berewe (IV) was aged about 28 at his father's death, and was therefore born about 1542. He died 2 February 1605-6. His Inq. p.m. was taken at Gloucester, 31 July following, when Edmund, his son and heir, was stated to be " aged 30 and more," showing that he was born about 1576. He married as his first wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Edmund Foxe, of Ludford. Where the children of this marriage were baptised is not at present known. She was bur. at Quedgeley, 8 October 1584 (P.R.). According to her monumental inscription in Quedgeley parish church, she died " 9 " October 1584. The parish register is probably correct. By this marriage James Berewe had issue, three sons and three daughters :—

1. Edmund Berewe, of ffelcourte, son and heir (VI).
2. John, whose will was proved at Gloucester, 1645. He married Martha, d. of Charles Foxe, and had a daughter, Elizabeth, bap. 1 October 1633 (Quedgeley P.R.), and a son, Charles, bap. at Awre, 23 February 1640 (P.R.).

1. Edmund Bereswe (IV).
2. Antony Bereswe, named in wills of brothers Roger (1566) and Edmund (1570).

IV. Edmund Bereswe, eldest son of Richard Bereswe (No. III), was of Falconbie, alias Falcount, and was bur. in the Lady Chapel, Awre, 22 August 1570 (P.R.). His will was proved at Gloucester, 30 September 1570. His Inq. p.m. (copy appended) was taken at Gloucester, 18 September 1570. He married Frances, daughter of James Cutrevoxe, of Frampton, in Glos. Gloucester, and had issue, four sons and four daughters:—

1. James, eldest son (V).
2. Edward.
3. John.
4. Richard.
1. Margaret, mar. John Stranbold, 4 October 1570; and secondly, Henry Trefell, 21 October 1582. Both marriages are recorded in the Awre Parish Register.
2. Eleanor, mar. John Nicholls, 8 October 1570. (Quedgeley Parish Register.)
3. Elizabeth.
4. Mary.

V. James Bereswe, eldest son of Edmund Bereswe (IV) was aged about 28 at his father's death, and was therefore born about 1542. He died 2 February 1605-6. His Inq. p.m. was taken at Gloucester, 31 July following, when Edmund, his son and heir, was stated to be "aged 30 and more," showing that he was born about 1576. He married as his first wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Edmund Foxe, of Ludford. Where the children of this marriage were baptised is not at present known. She was bur. at Quedgeley, 8 October 1584 (P.R.). According to her monumental inscription in Quedgeley parish church, she died "9" October 1584. The parish register is probably correct. By this marriage James Bereswe had issue, three sons and three daughters:—

1. Edmund Bereswe, of Falconbie, son and heir (VI).
2. John, whose will was proved at Gloucester, 1645. He married Martha, d. of Charles Foxe, and had a daughter, Elizabeth, bap. 1 October 1633 (Quedgeley P.R.), and a son, Charles, bap. at Awre, 22 February 1640 (P.R.).

3. James, d. s.p.

1. Dorothy, who married at Awre, 1 July 1594 (P.R.), Warren GOUGH, second son to . . . . Gough, of Howelsfield, in Com. Gloucester. (Warren Gough d. 18 December 1636, at St. Briavells. His Inq. p.m. was recorded 13 April 1637. See Gloucester Records, vol. iii, Index Library, text at length.)

This is the only Thomas who is named in the Visitation pedigree of 1623, and he is supposed to be the direct paternal ancestor of Sir Charles Barrow, Bart., as testified by him at the Heralds' College in 1783. The descendants of this Thomas will be shown below.

1. Susan, bap. at Quedgeley, 31 March 1588 (P.R.). She mar. Richard Dover.

Capt. John Barrow (Berewe) was buried at Awre, 16 April 1682 (P.R.), and was succeeded by his eldest son—

VIII. George Barrow, of Hayes, in Awre, who married, as his first wife, a lady unnamed, whose burial is thus recorded in the Parish Register of Awre:—"Mrs. . . . ., uxor Georgii B. de Haies, sepult. 1672." He had by her an only son—

George Barrow married secondly, Mary . . . . (see Awre Parish Register, 1687-1688, re baptism of daughters). By her he had an only son and four daughters:—

George Barrow was buried at Awre 3 April 1696 (P.R.). His will was proved at Gloucester, 20 April following (abstract appended).

The curious entries in the Awre Parish Register relating to the baptisms of George Barrow's daughters in 1687 and 1688, show that serious doubts were entertained about the validity of George Barrow's second

4. Elizabeth, who married William Sadler. Both Elizabeth and her husband are named in the will of George Barrow.

George Barrow was buried at Awre 3 April 1690 (P.R.). His will was proved at Gloucester, 20 April following (abstract appended).

The curious entries in the Awre Parish Register relating to the baptisms of George Barrow's daughters in 1687 and 1688, show that serious doubts were entertained about the validity of George Barrow's second marriage. If these doubts were well founded regarding the daughters, the legitimacy of the only son, Berea, (bap. 19 June 1692) seems also questionable. In any case it appears quite certain that the main line of this family came to an end on the death of George Barrow, of Hayes, in 1696, when the succession passed to Thomas Barrow, of Field Court, grandson of Thomas son of James Berewe (No. V above) and Catherine Boulton.

Of this Thomas Berewe, the elder, the only facts known to his great-grandson in 1783 were (1) that he was "living in 1641"; (2) that he was twice married, and had a son Thomas who was the grandfather of Sir Charles Barrow, Bart. The year 1641 was the year in which Edmund Berewe of ffelcourte (Field Court), half-brother of the elder Thomas aforesaid, died, and the expression "living in 1641" probably points to some public document in which the fact was formally stated, but no will of Edmund, or other document, has yet been found to establish this point.

The names of Thomas Berewe's two wives are not known, nor the date and place of these marriages, which are not recorded either at Awre or Quedgeley. The only facts known about Thomas Berewe himself are (1) that he was baptised at Awre, 18 March 1593, and (2) that he was buried there 13 February 1665. These facts have only recently come to light by an examination of the original parish register of Awre, co. Gloucester, and as there is only one Thomas in the Visitation pedigree of 1623, there seems to be no doubt that these entries refer to the Thomas aforesaid, son of James Berewe and Catherine Boulton. His children were :—

1. Thomas Barrow (Capt.), of Hayes, in Awre, grandfather of Sir Charles Barrow, Bart.
2. John Barrow, bap. 24 November 1632; bur. 7 January 1654 (Awre P.R.).

and others, of whom no record has yet been found.

Capt. Thomas Barrow married Margaret, daughter of John Knight, widow of John Pope. He was probably buried at Awre, 6 June 1683. She was bur. at Quedgeley, 27 September 1717 (P.R.). Her M.I. is in Quedgeley parish church. They had issue—

1. Thomas Barrow, of Field Court, bap. 16 October 1678 (Awre P.R.); d. 16 April 1736. Admon. 13 March 1738 to dau. Eleanor. M.I., Quedgeley. He married, 15 July 1711, Anne, dau. of William Hayward, (Quedgeley P.R.). She d. 12 June, and was bur. 15 June 1730 (Quedgeley P.R., and M.I.). They had an only daughter, Eleanor, who married Thomas Savage, Rector of Standish. Portraits of Eleanor Barrow and Rev. Thomas Savage are preserved at Flaxley Abbey. He died 24 April 1760. She died 7 February 1762-3 (Quedgeley, M.I.). Their daughter, Anne Savage, born 10 November 1745, married Sir Thomas Crawley-Boevey, Bart., of Flaxley Abbey, co. Gloucester, before he succeeded to the title.

The year 1641 was the year in which Edmund Berewe of Belcourte (Field Court), half-brother of the elder Thomas aforesaid, died, and the expression "living in 1641" probably points to some public document in which the fact was formally stated, but no will of Edmund, or other document, has yet been found to establish this point.

The names of Thomas Berewe's two wives are not known, nor the date and place of these marriages, which are not recorded either at Awre or Quedgeley. and others, of whom no record has yet been found.

Capt. Thomas Barrow married Margaret, daughter of John Knight, widow of John Pope. He was probably buried at Awre, 6 June 1683. She was bur. at Quedgeley, 27 September 1717 (P.R.). Her M.I. is in Quedgeley parish church. They had issue—

He married, 15 July 1711, Anne, dau. of William Hayward, (Quedgeley P.R.). She d. 12 June, and was bur. 15 June 1730 (Quedgeley P.R., and M.I.). They had an only daughter, Eleanor, who married Thomas Savage, Rector of Standish. Portraits of Eleanor Barrow and Rev. Thomas Savage are preserved at Flaxley Abbey. He died 24 April 1760. Gloucester, before he succeeded to the title.

2. Charles Barrow, bap. 13 September 1681 (Awre P.R.), d. 3 March 1743-4. M.I. Churcham, near Gloucester. He married Elizabeth Harris, daughter of the Lieut.-Governor of the Leeward Islands, and had a son, Charles, born in the Island of St. Christopher, circa 1707. This son was created a Baronet as Sir Charles Barrow, of Highgrove, co. Gloucester, with remainder to his kinsman by marriage, Thomas Crawley-Boevey, of Flaxley Abbey. Sir Charles Barrow died 10 January 1789, "aged 80," and was buried at Minsterworth, co. Gloucester. M.I. If he was aged 76 in 1783, according to his own statement in that year, he was apparently in his eighty-second year when he died.
3. Margaret Barrow, bap. 12 April 1670 (Quedgeley P.R.).

Besides these three surviving children, there was a son, William, bap. 2 September 1674 (Quedgeley P.R.), who appears to have died in infancy. This pedigree shows that the domestic history of the Barrow (Berewe) family is intimately connected with the Gloucestershire parishes of Awre, Quedgeley, and Hardwick. Field Court, the latest seat of the Barrow family, is now a farmhouse situated near Quedgeley, in the parish of Hardwick. The principal memorials of the family are in Quedgeley parish church.

WILLIAM PHILLIMORE WATTS PHILLIMORE.

William Phillimore Watts Phillimore was the eldest son of William Phillimore Phillimore (formerly Stiff), B.Med., of Sneaton, Nottingham, the medical superintendent of the county asylum there, and Mary Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Benjamin Watts, of Bridgen Hall, Bridgnorth, Shropshire; and he was born at Nottingham on 27 October 1853.

His patronymic was really Stiff—the Stiffs and the Phillimores were both old families of clothiers, resident for many generations at Cam in Gloucestershire—but Dr. Stiff assumed the name of Phillimore by royal licence in 1873, his great-grandfather, Thomas Stiff, of Cam, having married Ann, daughter of Jonathan Phillimore of that place.

Having been educated privately, he entered Queen's College, Oxford, 31 May 1873, and in 1876 took a Second Class in Jurisprudence, and graduated B.A. In 1880 he became M.A. and B.C.L., and the same year was admitted a Solicitor.

It was whilst an undergraduate at Oxford that his interest in genealogy developed. He had the advantage there of the splendid collections in the Bodleian Library and the library of his own college, of which he made good use. His vacations were largely spent in Gloucestershire, working up the genealogies of the Phillimore, Stiff, and other kindred families. In early life he contributed papers to Jewitt's Reliquary and similar publications.

His best known book is How to Write the History of a Family, which appeared in 1887. This was quickly out of print, as also a second and enlarged edition; and a supplement was issued in 1906. This book proved indispensable to all genealogists who were working up pedigrees and family history, and a new and revised edition, brought up to date by the inclusion of new sources of information that have been opened up during the last ten years, would be a real boon to genealogists.

Phillimore's strong point was his far-sightedness and aptitude for starting new societies. He possessed great organising ability, and set on foot many schemes which are still at work, showing the need there was for their existence. The first of these was The Index Library, which he originated in 1887, and which is now better known as The British Record Society. The object of this was to print the calendars of wills stored in the various probate registries, and indexes of various classes of public records. It has however also printed certain records themselves, e.g., the Inquisitions Post Mortem for Gloucestershire and Wilts. At the present time it has issued nearly fifty volumes.

In 1894 he commenced to print the marriage registers of various counties. The marriages only were extracted from various parish registers, and printed in volumes of about 150 pages, at the price of 10s. 6d. a volume. This venture has proved very successful. About thirty counties have been taken in hand, and some 200 volumes have been issued, comprising over 1,200 parishes. In this work he was fortunate in securing the co-operation of a number of local enthusiasts who copied their local registers. The success of this scheme has been greatly forwarded by the labours and industry of Mr. T. M. Blagg, whom Mr. Phillimore took into partnership some years ago. These volumes are not indexed, but Mr. Phillimore's intention was to print one general index to the marriages for each county as soon as all the registers for that county had been extracted and printed.

Other Societies initiated by Phillimore were the Scottish Record Society, which started with his printing certain calendars of Scottish wills and records in 1896; the Thoroton Society, for printing Nottinghamshire records, in 1897; and the Canterbury and York Society, for printing the episcopal registers of the dioceses of England and Wales, in 1904. All these societies are still being diligently carried on, showing that their work was really needed. He also was active in the foundation of the Shropshire Parish Register Society, and the Staffordshire Parish Register Society, and for some years edited the publications of both societies.

Notwithstanding all this work for societies, a constant stream of books and pamphlets emanated from Phillimore's pen. He compiled

He also was active in the foundation of the Shropshire Parish Register Society, and the Staffordshire Parish Register Society, and for some years edited the publications of both societies.

Notwithstanding all this work for societies, a constant stream of books and pamphlets emanated from Phillimore's pen. He compiled various family histories: Some Account of the Family of Holbrow, in 1901; The Family of Middlemore, the same year; pamphlets on the Watts family, the Finmore family, etc., and at his death he had been for some years engaged on a big history of The Family of Phillimore, a work in which Sir Walter Phillimore was much interested, and it is to be hoped that this book will one day see the light. He also had in view a series of volumes of County Pedigrees—pedigrees not limited to any one class of society, but of this series only one volume was printed, "Nottinghamshire, vol. i," in 1910; the second volume was well in hand at his death, and will in due course be issued.

It is impossible to enumerate all Phillimore's writings—they fill many pages in the British Museum Catalogue. But amongst the most useful of his works not already mentioned are: Pedigree Work, 1900; Heralds' College and Coats of Arms regarded from a Legal Aspect, 1904; The Law and Practice of Grants of Arms, 1905; and Changes of Name, 1906.

With such a mass of work continually going on, and with so many irons in the fire, it is not to be wondered at that at times his work got into arrear, and Societies were compelled to appoint other editors of their publications, to ensure the usual output being issued to their members. Phillimore was sadly overworked, and had far too much to do, more than any single man could accomplish.

The custody and preservation of local records was a great hobby of his, and he drafted several Bills dealing with their safe custody. In 1897 he came prominently into public notice through the "Shipway Case," when wills and tombstones were forged in order to prove a pedigree, and it was due to Phillimore that the fraud was unmasked.

For some time before his death he resided at Berkhamsted, and latterly at Gerrard's Cross. His health failing, he was taken to Torquay to recruit, and after an illness of several months' duration he died there on 9th April last. He was interred on the 15th April in the family vault at Bridgnorth, by the side of his father and mother, the present writer officiating at his interment. He had married in 1887, Miss Jane Graham, a lady of Scottish descent, and has left his widow and one son, Mr. Wilfrid Henderson Phillimore, surviving.

Of Phillimore's work it is impossible to speak too highly. There is no living genealogist who is not indebted to his publications, and who will not render a tribute of gratitude to his memory for what he has done. He literally died in harness, working laboriously up to the last. He was always ready to afford assistance to others, out of his stores of knowledge. The present writer has had a personal friendship with him for nearly forty years, going back to early Oxford days. For some of the facts in this memoir the writer is indebted to an obituary notice in The Athenaeum, of 19th April last, but it is mainly from personal knowledge that this memoir has been compiled. He has left a gap which it will not be easy to fill.

This extraordinary inscription does not appear to have been hitherto translated. There is a tradition that it is the work of some seventeenth century wits of the Middle Temple, friends of John Hoskyns, but, to modern taste, the wit is not very brilliant, and the style is laboured. The three stanzas on the front of the tomb appear to be by three separate hands, as each is complete in itself. The whole of the poetry on the back of the tomb, being continuously connected, must be the work of one person. Therefore, according to this view, the poetry on the tomb is by four distinct persons. The following translation has been attempted in the face of numerous doubts and difficulties.

[On the front of the tomb.]

To the Reader, greeting in death. I lived, devoted to so many dear friends, and to the law, and to the King, and to the poor, and to God, to my children, to my estate, to my country, and to the learned Muses, that if you ask how to all of these I rendered what was due (I answer) I exerted myself with a wholesome zeal for the King and for the law, I gave gifts to the poor and my soul to God, I took thought for my country, I adorned the Muses with song, my children with intelligence, my grave thus with my body. Now, endowed with the gift of a threefold life, I live, a pleasant ornament of the law-court, of poetry, and of heaven. Thou hast read my deeds : to thee, departing, it now remains in like manner to travel over the course of thine own life.

I have passed through seventy-two years ; now there is no day on which Death will come unexpected. What I have said, written, done, my business, my amusements, may silent Peace hide in her everlasting bosom. Whatever men lawfully demand, let my heir pay, that no complaint disturb my ashes. And whatever I owe to God, unrighteous spendthrift that I am, pay, O Christ, my surety, I beseech thee, with thy blood in my name.

To the Reader, greeting in death. I lived, devoted to so many dear friends, and to the law, and to the King, and to the poor, and to God, to my children, to my states, to my country, and to the learned Muses, that if you ask how to all of these I rendered what was due (I answer) I exerted myself with a wholesome zeal for the King and for the law, I gave gifts to the poor and my soul to God, I took thought for my country, I adorned the Muses with song, my children with intelligence, my grave thus with my body. 3.

Behold, buried under this urn rest the ashes of the admirable John Hoskyns, a servant to God and the laws, of the King and of his country; and a Judge of farthest Wales. Who begot a son Bennet and a daughter Benedicta, who survived him, sprung from a sturdy scion of Moyle, mourning, alas, the death of their father and mother. And he himself at last entered his country (a second wife having died without issue), to the grief alike of learned and simple, singing in pleasant praises.[19]

[On the back of the tomb.]

1.

He whom all the world does not conceal is covered by this grave,—Hoskyns, a marvel of human genius. To such an extent did he cultivate two things of all most opposite,—things which do not enter into the same breast. Strong in the Muses and the Laws, combining pleasure with good repute, a Muse of the Law, a Strain of the Courts. Equally distinguished in pleading and in poetry, he deservedly gained applause on all sides.[20] So David is said to have made his harp resound while holding the laws of the inhabitants of Jerusalem and of the Jewish race.

It is credible that such an Amphion built the walls of Thebes, and in like manner made resound his unwearied lute, so led fierce peoples, and with the lyre united men drawn from their rustic caves; (that) in like fashion burned the divine breast of great Plato, when he founded laws, mourning for . . . . . .[?]; (that) such a poet lived in Solon [?] and in those to whom it is given to be at once sober and enthusiastic. But thou, O great one, diest, while on both sides is the quarrel waged, and both Astraea and Thalia desire thee for their own.

The former dwells in the heavens, but the latter on earthly shores. Thou wilt be set, as thine own Judge, before the goddesses. Doubtless Hoskyns will divide himself into two parts, this one gains heaven, this small part earth.

Therefore to the tuneful dust, of a parent of pious memory, most learned in the law, the weeping Bennet has set up this marble inscribed tomb, and follows his father, but not with equal steps.

[On the end of the tomb.]

Asleep in Christ, I will rise to glory.

John Hoskyns was a Serjeant at Law and Justice Itinerant in Wales. His son Bennet was created a Baronet in 1676. (See G.E.C.'s Complete Baronetage, Wood's Athenæ Oxonienses, Dugdale's Origines Juridiciales, Foster's and Burke's Peerages. See also No. 136.)

Dwelly's Parish Records. Edited by E. Dwelly. Vol. I—The First Portion of the Bishop's Transcripts at Wells, copied from the originals by Arthur J. Jewers. Herne Bay (printed and published by the Editor).

This is the first of a new series of volumes which are to deal with Bishops' Transcripts, Monumental Inscriptions in churchyards and churches, Parish Registers and Nonconformist Registers, all relating chiefly to the counties of Devon and Somerset. Mr. Dwelly has wisely commenced with those of the transcripts at Wells, which are in a fragile condition, and which, it is to be feared, may in a few years time become altogether undecipherable, for Mr. Jewers in his "foreword" to this volume tells us that "many of the earlier returns are lace-like from decay, the effect of damp." The transcripts have been printed under parishes arranged alphabetically down to the middle of the letter H, and it is intended shortly to issue the second and concluding portion, which will form the next volume of this new series of printed records. These transcripts are doubly welcome from the fact that Somerset, especially the eastern division of the county, has been somewhat neglected by workers in the field of genealogical research, not even a list of wills proved at Wells having as yet been printed, and comparatively few parish registers. As the Editor points out in his Preface, the transcripts will be found extremely valuable to anyone collecting information about a family known to have been settled in Somerset, but the particular parish in which it was located being uncertain. To such an enquirer a glance through these pages will save much trouble and expense. In the most difficult task which genealogists have to face, the tracing of marriages and discovery of the parishes in which they were celebrated, this publication will be of such great assistance that we hope that in course of time not only the most fragile, but the whole of the transcripts at Wells may be in print. It should be remembered by anyone who makes a search in this volume that these records were at all times carelessly kept, and the spelling of names differs frequently in succeeding years. Mr. Jewers indeed informs us that the transcripts have sometimes been found to vary verbally from the original parish registers when there has been an opportunity of comparing them. During the seventeenth century we find interesting entries relating to popish recusants, and persons excommunicate; there are also certificates by the clergy that parishioners have received the Easter Communion, and particulars concerning vagrants sent home to counties sometimes as far off as Cheshire. Among the many knightly and gentle families of Somerset whose names occur frequently in these transcripts are those of Berkeley, Dodington, Halswell, Hawley, Kiligrew, Lancaster, Malet, Popham, Portman, and Sydenham. Not a few extraordinary Christian names are to be found, such as Cressela and Jenarivale, p. 146; Adronicus, p. 205; Aramirsing, p. 218; Oineri and Sabrene, p. 326, and Expoñsoi and Eponforus, apparently variants of the same name, on pp. 373 and 375.

The Editor throws out a hint in his Preface that the continuation of these valuable transcripts is necessarily dependent on the support he may receive, and we venture to suggest to him that he would be much more likely to obtain this support, if he would issue a complete index of names to each volume. As it is, we are informed that an unprinted index is in existence and may be consulted for a small fee, but experience tells us that the public is more ready to subscribe to a well indexed volume than to pay any sort of fee. It is moreover quite a mistake to suppose that an index would, as Mr. Dwelly seems to think, double the cost of printing.

CATALOGUE OF PHILLIMORE'S PARISH REGISTER SERIES. London (Phillimore & Co., Ltd., 124, Chancery Lane).

It is a matter of great satisfaction to find that under the superintendence of the general editor, Mr. T. M. Blagg, F.S.A., the late Mr. Phillimore's excellent scheme of printing the Marriage entries in Parish Registers is to go on, notwithstanding his lamented death. The object of this Catalogue is to show what has been already accomplished in this Series, and it will, we think, be somewhat of a surprise to genealogists to learn that no less than two hundred volumes have been printed, and the Marriages of upwards of two million persons recorded. The Catalogue is arranged doubly, first under Counties, and again under parishes. We observe that some Counties have been given a preference over others, as for instance Gloucestershire, Nottinghamshire, and Rutland, while Berkshire, Cheshire, Cumberland, Devonshire, Essex, Kent, and Suffolk have received scant attention, and Durham, Sussex, and Yorkshire are entirely unrepresented. This omission is as regards the last named County to be shortly remedied. It is much to be regretted that all the volumes in this Series are unindexed, and that many genealogists who would otherwise have become subscribers have been thus discouraged.

Notes and Queries.

EARLY ANCESTRY OF THE LORDS GRANDISON.—I notice that in English peerages (Burke, etc.) the ancestry of the early Lords Grandison is not given. They belonged to the Swiss family of Grandson, the place of that name being situated on the railway about half way between Lausanne and Neuchâtel. The best pedigree of the family I have seen is in the "Société d'Histoire de la Suisse Romande," vol. xxviii, published 1873 by Louis de Charriere. As this book is in the British Museum Library (under Academies, Lausanne), I need not quote it here, but will just mention that Ebal IV, Sire de Grandson, died 1235; his son Pierre I was Sire de Grandson, and was succeeded by his son Amadeus, who was father of the Guillaume de Grandson, a baron of England, who went to the Scotch Wars with Edward I.

W. H. TURTON, Lt.-Col.

UVEDALE AND WOODALL.—In the will of Margaret Babington, widow, proved 14 April 1559 (P.C.C., 6 Chaynay), the testatrix names her (married) daughter Anne "Vuedale," and in a codicil she calls this daughter in one place Anne "Woodall," and in another "Wodall." It would thus seem that these names are identical.

They belonged to the Swiss family of Grandson, the place of that name being situated on the railway about half way between Lausanne and Neuchâtel. The best pedigree of the family I have seen is in the "Société d'Histoire de la Suisse Romande," vol. xxviii, published 1873 by Louis de Charrière. As this book is in the British Museum Library (under Academie, Lausanne), I need not quote it here, but will just mention that Edal IV, Sire de Grandson, died 1325, his son Pierre I was Sire de Grandson, and was succeeded by his son Amadeus, who was father of the Guillaume de Grandson, a baron of England, who went to the Scotch Wars with Edward I.

UPHAM AND WOODALL.—In the will of Margaret Baldington, widow, proved 14 April 1505 (P.C.C., 6 Dingeley), the testatrix names her (married) daughter Anne "Vnedale," and in a codicil she calls this daughter in one place Anne "Woodall," and in another "Vpham." It would thus seem that these names are identical.

A PEDIGREE OF THE CHESHIRE FAMILIES OF WHITTINGHAM AND BERINGTON, DRAWN ON VELLUM AND PAINTED BY THE THIRD RANDLE HOLME OF CHESTER IN 1664.

This pedigree is clearly and neatly written in a good hand, and the arms are moderately well painted in gold and colours. It is drawn on five membranes of vellum, which are cemented together, and it measures 9 feet 3 inches in length by 1 foot and half-an-inch in width. There are twenty-four shields of arms, besides the large achievement at the foot of the pedigree.

The title, at the top, is on a plain cartouche, with the ends turned up, gilded and pierced with bean-shaped black holes as ornaments. Below the title there are, side by side, two somewhat similar, but smaller, cartouches, bearing the inscriptions given below. The names, etc., of the persons in the pedigree are within circles of double lines and are connected with the shields by strong red lines.

It will be noticed that in the eighth generation the arms of Seth Whittingham are changed, and that his descendants continued to use the later coat. Reference to Holme's "Academy of Armory," 1688 (book ii, p. 141), and to the Visitations of Lancashire in 1567, 1613 and 1664-5, printed by the Chetham Society, will show that there is uncertainty regarding the Whittingham arms. Sometimes the lion is rampant-guardant and sometimes rampant; and in some cases the fesse is below the lion and in others he is debruised by it. In an Elizabethan MS. the Whittinghams of Whittingham are stated to have borne the coat Per fesse Argent and Or, a fesse Vert, over all a lion rampant Gules. Unfortunately no arms seem to have been recorded at the Visitations of Cheshire in 1580 and 1613 (see the Harleian Society's publications), and at the Visitation of 1663-4 the family were unable to prove their arms and had respite for further evidence which does not to seem have been forthcoming.

In the Raven arms the object upon which the raven is perched is shaded to resemble a ball. This charge is described both as an orb and a torteau.

There are pedigrees of the Berington family in Ormerod's History of Cheshire, in the Visitations of Cheshire taken in 1580 and 1613, printed by the Harleian Society, and in Earwaker's History of Sandbach, but none of these notice George Berington who married Jane Fellowbrome (Fallibrome) and their descendants.

In Burke's Commoners of Great Britain and Ireland (vol. iv, p. 336) there is a pedigree of Berington of Bradwall and Sandbach as an addition to that of Lowndes of Hassall.

Mr. J. H. E. Bennett, of Chester, has added much to our knowledge of the Beringtons in his paper on this family printed in the Journal of the Architectural, Archæological and Historic Society for the County and City of Chester and North Wales, 1913, vol. xix, pp. 125-161.

Mooresbarrow Hall estate is in the parish of Middlewich, in Northwich Hundred (ibid. vol. iii, pp. 201, 202). The hall was a half-timbered building, surrounded by a moat.

Smallwood is in the parish of Astbury, in Northwich Hundred (ibid. vol. iii, p. 56).

THE FAMILIES OF FOX AND TATTERSHALL.

In Ward's Lives of the Gresham Professors it is stated that among the possessions of Sir Thomas Gresham were "landes in Isleworth and other places thereabowtes called Foxes and also Tottersolles." The printed London and Middlesex Feet of Fines (Hardy and Page) shows that in 28 Hen. VIII, one Edward Fox acquired lands, etc., at Chiswick and also that in 7 and 8 Eliz., Richard Tattersall, gent., and others conveyed a third part of premises at Isleworth to Nicholas Williams, Esq. This Nicholas was son to Reynold Williams,[1] of Burghfield, Berks, whose wife was Elizabeth, dau. to John Foxe of Isleworth, sister and heir to Edward Foxe of the same (Visitation of Berks 1566). Taking these data in conjunction with the fact that John and Richard Williams (brothers of Nicholas)[2] had, as their wills show, an uncle Richard Tattershall, who could not have been uncle on the father's side,[3] it is clear that Richard Tattershall must have married another Foxe coheiress.

Ann Williams, sister to John and Nicholas, married the well-known "Tony" Forster, and on her brass at Cumnor 1572, she quarters the arms of Fox of Chacombe, N'hants—a chevron Erminois between 3 lions' heads erased, on a chief barry nebulée a pale charged with a pelican all within a bordure charged with 10 hurts. But there does not seem to be a place for these Foxes of Isleworth in the pedigree of Fox of Chacombe. Barker, Garter, made a grant to John Fox of Ropsley, co. Linc.[4]—Gules, a chevron Ermine between 3 lions' heads erased Or. On a chief of the last a pale Azure charged with a pelican of the third ; all within a bordure of the second, charged with eight hurts. Inasmuch as the before-named Raynold Williams had, as his will shows, lands at Ropsley, the inference is that his father-in-law John Fox of Isleworth was identical with John Fox of Ropsley, and that the engraving of the quartering on the Cumnor brass is incorrect in detail.

As regards the Tattershalls, there was a family of that name settled at Finchampstead, Berks, only a few miles from the home of the Williams family, from 1584. It is difficult to put in narrative form the evidence that seems to identify the Finchampstead Tattershalls with those who were allied to the Williams family through the Foxes, and the case can be best understood through the medium of tabular pedigrees.

[1] Reynold was brother to Lord Williams of Thame. It is singular that the will of their father Sir John is recorded in the Prerogative Court as that of John Williams, esquire. The only explanation is that the document was executed a fortnight before Sir John was knighted.

[2] Richard was the survivor of the brothers and at his death the family became extinct in the male line, Lord Williams having left no son.

THE FAMILIES OF FOX AND TATTERSHALL.

In Ward's Lives of the Gresham Professors it is stated that among the possessions of Sir Thomas Gresham were "lands in Islewerth and other places thereabowts called Foxes and also Totterselles." The printed London and Middlesex Fect of Fines (Hardy and Page) shows that in 28 Hen. VIII, one Edward Fox acquired lands, etc., at Chiswick and also that in 7 and 8 Eliz., Richard Tatterstall, gent., and others conveyed a third part of premises at Islewerth to Nicholas Williams, Esq. This Nicholas was son to Reynold Williams,[1] of Burghfield, Berks, whose wife was Elizabeth, dau. to John Foxe of Islewerth, sister and heir to Edward Foxe of the same (Visitation of Berks 1566). Taking these data in conjunction with the fact that John and Richard Williams (brothers of Nicholas)[2] had, as their wills show, an uncle Richard Tattershall, who could not have been uncle on the father's side,[3] it is clear that Richard Tattershall must have married another Foxe coheiress.

Ann Williams, sister to John and Nicholas, married the well-known "Tony" Forster, and on her brass at Gunnor 1572, she quarters the arms of Fox of Chacombe, N'hants—a chevron Ermines between 3 lions' heads erased, on a chief barry nebulée a pale charged with a pelican all within a bordure charged with 10 Aints. But there does not seem to be a place for these Foxes of Islewerth in the pedigree of Fox of Chacombe. Barker, Garter, made a grant to John Fox of Ropsley, co. Linc.[4]—Gules, a chevron Ermine between 3 lions' heads erased Or. On a chief of the last a pale Azure charged with a pelican of the third; all within a bordure of the second, charged with eight Aints. Inasmuch as the before-named Reynold Williams had, as his will shows, lands at Ropsley, the inference is that his father-in-law John Fox of Islewerth was identical with John Fox of Ropsley, and that the engraving of the quartering on the Gunnor brass is incorrect in detail.

As regards the Tattershalls, there was a family of that name settled at Finchampstead, Berks, only a few miles from the home of the Williams family, from 1581. It is difficult to put in narrative form the evidence that seems to identify the Finchampstead Tattershalls with those who were allied to the Williams family through the Foxes, and the case can be best understood through the medium of tabular pedigrees.

Lest it should seem far-fetched to identify Richard Tottersoll of Beaulieu Park as brother of George who married widow Anne Parkyns, it should be noted that the said Richard had lands at Crookham, which place actually adjoins Brimpton where William Parkyns lived. Again, George Tottersoll of Beaulieu, 1603, had an aunt Welles. This agrees with my identification of him with the George who married Katherine, daughter of William Parkyns by Anne Welles his wife.

As is shown in Miss Sharp's History of Ufton Court, the Tattershalls were closely associated with the Perkyns or Parkyns family as recusants. When search was made at Ufton Court for malcontents in 1586, there were lodging in the house "Mrs. Tottersall mother to Mr. Parkyns, Mr. Georg Tottersoll and his wife, Mr. Edmond Tottersoll."[1] This George would be he who married Katherine Parkyns, and Edmond was no doubt his brother. It is conceivable that as the Tattershall family identified themselves with the religious and political disaffection of the sixteenth century, they temporarily occupied Beaulieu Park on account of its offering very convenient access to France. Coming to a rather later date, Mr. S. R. Gardiner tells us that one Captain Tattersall, whose vessel, captured by the royal fleet in 1648, had been released by Charles' order, gratefully promised to convey his benefactor to a place of safety, and accordingly took the king from Brighton to Fécamp, October 14th-15th 1651.

I have not overlooked the pedigree in Burke's Family Records.

Although the thirty menus which are found in different parts of the MS. are decidedly interesting to philologists and to those interested in the appetites of our ancestors, it seems unnecessary to print them all here; four are, however, given as representative of the series. The first of these was apparently for an al fresco supper held in the garden at Westminster; the second a dinner given on the occasion of the King's visit to the Marquess of Exeter; while the two last were for specially magnificent meals served in honour of the Cardinals Wolsey and Campeggio, at the time of the latter's visit to England in connection with the King's divorce from Catherine of Arragon.

The hours of the dinner and supper do not seem to have been absolutely fixed. In the Eltham Ordinances (17 Henry VIII)[196] it is laid down that "there is no time certaine to be prefixed or lymitted for preparation of the King and Queen's meate, but the same always to be ordered as shall stand with their high pleasure," but it is also stated that, when the hall was kept, the dinner for the household was to begin "at tenn of the clock, or somewhat afore; and the first supper at foure of the clock on worke dayes; and on holy dayes, the first dynner to begin after the King be gone to chapell, to his divine service, and likewise at souper." And when the King's hall was not kept the times were to be in all departments, including the King's and Queen's chambers, "for dinner at eleven of the clock before noone, or neere thereupon, and for supper at six of the clock at afternoone; not tarrying nor digressing from this order for the King's highnesse, nor for such as attend upon his Grace in his disporte or otherwise." On folio 9A of the present MS., "the lord gret maister and the lordes sitting with him" are ordered to be at dinner at 10 o'clock and at supper at 5 o'clock.

A Trevigar Record.

By Henry Warren, F.S.A.

In the chancel of Hurstmonceux Church, in a line with the Hare and Naylor tablets, appears the subjoined monumental inscription to an eighteenth century Rector, Luke Trevigar; and with it is offered an attempt at tracing the family connections of this clerical worthy, rendered possible by the fact that, though only two generations of Trevigar survived in England,[1] no less than six administrations and wills relating to the family were found at Somerset House. His virtues, so highly extolled, had not passed unrecognised. He had held successively three Chichester Prebends, before he became a Canon Residentiary, becoming Prebendary of Firle in 1753, of Eastham in 1767, and of Hurst in 1770. It was only in the year of his death that he was appointed Chancellor of the Cathedral and Rector of Felpham. In regard to Mrs. Trevigar an extract may be quoted from a letter of the late Augustus Hare :—

"Miss Marriotti was the bosom friend of Mary Margaret (née "Alston, of the Vatche), second wife of my great-grandfather, "Francis Hare, Bishop of Chichester. She was married by Mr. "Hare to Mr. Luke Trevigar, son of an old friend of the Bishop; "the great intimacy was never broken, and Mr. and Mrs. Trevigar "usually passed the whole summer with the Hares, though I believe "he was then Rector of Icklesham. Mrs. Marriotti lived for long "after her daughter's marriage. The family letters are always full of "the Marriottis. I have sometimes thought Mrs. M. must have been "Mary Margaret's governess. I think it must have been Francis "Naylor, the Bishop's son, who gave Mr. Trevigar the [then] rich "living of Hurstmonceux, out of affection for his stepmother, to "whom all were devoted."

Sacred to the Memory of the Rev^{d} Mr. Luke Trevigar, M.A., Canon Residentiary of Chichester and Rector of this Church and Parish, who died April 18th 1772, aged 67, and of Elizabeth his wife who departed this life April 28th 1780, aged 74 years.
With what Zeal, Learning and Eloquence this truly Christian Pastor interpreted and fulfilled his divine Master's will Let these hallowed walls proclaim !
With what unremitted and unaffected Piety his beloved wife exemplified his doctrines in the course of a religious life, rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, Let the extensive circle of her friends and each surviving member of his flock pronounce !
Sincere and unparalleled in their friendship;
generous and liberal in their hospitality;
happy in every moral and social virtue;
instant and fervent in their devotion;
Esteemed by man, approved by God;
Living the life and dying the death of the righteous;
Leaving a sorrowing World, they now reap their Reward.

The tributary tear of gratefull affection starts forth;
Come then, expressive Silence, muse their praise.

(The Arms impaled, which surmounted the inscription, are no longer decipherable.)

[1] To be buried in S. James' Churchyard; the silver candlesticks sent him by brother Samuel from France to be given to Luke's wife; his daughter, Lucy, wife of John Gorgo, had received a legacy of £100 from John Delapradelle. (The will of the latter, who was a refugee from La Rochefoucauld, naturalized in 1703, and the childless husband of Elizabeth de la Primaudaye, was proved in 1733, and is found in P.C.C. 37, Price.)

[2] This lady is identified in the will proved in 1733 (P.C.C. 158, Price) of Elie de Leriget de Moussac, a refugee residing in the parish of S. James', Westminster, who, while appointing Dr. Trevigar his executor, left £100 to the wife.

[3] He held the office of "Gentleman Usher and Daily Waiter" with a salary of £150. His first wife, whom he married in 1723, was Marthe Marie Moreau. He was a refugee from La Rochefoucauld, and had been naturalized in 1706. René de Saunières de l'Hermitage, who enjoyed (see Agnew) an Irish pension of £500, and was also of S. James', Westminster, was apparently his uncle. Frances Noguier, née Saunières, in her will of 1758, calls Frances Montford and Mary and Elizabeth Trevigar her cousins.

[4] Miss Mary Gabrielle de Fonvive († 1761) names in will of 1749 "Mary & Elizabeth Trevigar, with whom I board," leaving them an annuity of £14, as also their three sisters, Gorgo, Mountford and Roberts, and leaves two guineas to Miss Judith Gorgo.

THE IDENTITY OF SAINT CATHERINE AUDLEY.

By Howard M. Chapin, F.R.Hist.S., Librarian of the Rhode Island Historical Society.

Saint Catherine Audley, the semi-legendary patron saint of Ledbury, in Herefordshire, about whose holy life so many curious tales still linger amongst the people of the countryside, has sometimes been considered a wife and sometimes a daughter of some Nicholas Audley.

The following facts indisputably identify her as the wife of Nicholas, Baron Audley of Heleigh, and daughter of John, Baron Giffard of Brimsfield.

Dugdale, in the account of the Audley family in his Baronage (1675, vol. i, p. 748) says, referring to Nicholas Audley, son of James : " This Nicholas married Catherine, one of the Daughters and Co-heirs of Maud de Longespe, Widdow of John Giffard of Brimsfield, and departed this life 27 Edw. I, leaving Thomas his Son and Heir at that time ten years of age."

In the same article, referring to this Catherine, wife of Nicholas, Baron Audley, Dugdale says (p. 748) : " Which Catherine had for her share of her Mother's Inheritance (as Daughter and Co-heir to Walter de Clifford) upon the partition made betwixt herself and her other sisters, the Castle of Thlandeury with the Commotes of Perneth and Jenrin in Wales (Rot. Fin. 27 Ed. I, m. 1)."

Thus we find Catherine, wife of Nicholas, Baron Audley, seized in her own right of the castle of Thlandeury in 27 Edw. I. For Walter de Clifford had died in 48 Hen. III (p. 337), leaving Thlandeury to his daughter Maud, who must have died before 15 Edw. I, at which time her husband John, Baron Giffard, had a subsequent [third] wife (p. 501). John de Giffard and Nicholas de Audley, the father and the husband respectively of Catherine de Audley, both died in 27 Ed. I.

Turning now to S. Baring-Gould's Lives of the Saints, appendix, article on St. Katherine Audley, we find the following item : " Katharine de Audeleie granted to James de Perrers and Ela his wife her daughter the castle and Town of Thlauandeuery, &c. Dated at Ledbury. Close roll 7 Ed. II." Also, " Katherine de Audele, Recluse of Ledbury, was granted annuity of £22 by the King. Close rolls 16, 17, 18 Edw. II."

These close roll items prove that the Katherine Audley, " recluse," " holy woman," " saint," of Ledbury, temp. Edw. II, was either wife or widow of some Audley and was seised of the Castle of Thlauandeuery (Thlandeury).

Dugdale's account, given above, shows us that Catherine, the wife of Nicholas, Baron Audley, inherited the Castle of Thlandeury from her grandfather, Walter de Clifford, and that she was seized of it in the latter part of the reign of Edward I. These two accounts together thus identify the Catherine, wife of Nicholas, Baron Audley, as the Catherine Audley of Ledbury, recluse, who gave the Castle of Thlandeury to her daughter.

THE IDENTITY OF SAINT CATHERINE AUDLEY.

I, leaving Thomas his Son and Heir at that time ten years of age."

In the same article, referring to this Catherine, wife of Nicholas, Baron Audley, Dugdale says (p. 718): "Which Catherine had for her share of her Mother's Inheritance (as Daughter and Co-heir to Walter de Clifford) upon the partition made betwixt herself and her other sisters, the Castle of Tilsandonery with the Commonties of Fernedh and Jerrin in Wales (Rot. Fin. 27 Ed. I, m. 1)."

Thus we find Catherine, wife of Nicholas, Baron Audley, seized in her own right of the castle of Tilsandonery in 27 Edw. I. For Walter de Clifford had died in 18 Hen. III (p. 337), leaving Tilsandonery to his daughter Maud, who must have died before 15 Edw. I, at which time her husband John, Baron Giffard, had a subsequent [third] wife (p. 301). John de Giffard and Nicholas de Audley, the father and the husband respectively of Catherine de Audley, both died in 27 Ed. I.

Turning now to S. Baring-Gould's Lives of the Saints, appendix, article on St. Katherine Audley, we find the following item: "Katherine de Audeleio granted to James de Ferrers and Ela his wife her daughter the castle and Town of Tilsandonery, &c. Dated at Ledbury. Close roll 7 Ed. II." Also, "Katherine de Audele, Heiress of Ledbury, was granted annuity of £22 by the King. Close rolls 16, 17, 18 Edw. II."

These close roll items prove that the Katherine Audley, "reclusa," "holy woman," "saint," of Ledbury, temp. Edw. II, was either wife or widow of some Audley and was seized of the Castle of Tilsandonery (Tilsandonery).

Dugdale's account, given above, shows us that Catherine, the wife of Nicholas, Baron Audley, inherited the Castle of Tilsandonery from her grandfather, Walter de Clifford, and that she was seized of it in the latter part of the reign of Edward I. These two accounts together thus identify the Catherine, wife of Nicholas, Baron Audley, as the Catherine Audley of Ledbury, reclusa, who gave the Castle of Tilsandonery to her daughter.

Nicholas, Baron Audley, died in 27 Edw. I, leaving Catherine, then twenty-seven years old [Dugdale, p. 501], doubtless an attractive widow. Catherine, apparently deeply mourning the loss of her husband, retired to Ledbury where she might lead the quiet life of a recluse, and as a result of her piety, kindness and general attractiveness, became sainted in the hearts and minds of the country people. In the centuries that followed many pretty legends arose concerning her. These legends are retold in S. Baring-Gould's Lives of the Saints and in Wordsworth's poem.

St. Catherine Audley, through her son Nicholas, second Baron Audley, has left many descendants in England.

Through her mother, St. Catherine was great-granddaughter of Llewellyn, Prince of Wales.

THE EXTINCT AND DORMANT PERRAGES OF THE NORTHERN COUNTIES OF ENGLAND. By John William Clay, F.S.A. London (James Nisbet and Co.).

Although there does not appear to be any valid reason for dividing the Peerage of these realms into two hard and fast divisions—north and south—and indeed such a classification must be an arbitrary one, this attempt to bring within the compass of a handy volume the pedigrees of our great northern houses now extinct, will be found of great assistance to those students of history who have little time or inclination to consult original authorities on the Peerage. The pedigrees are arranged under the surnames of peers and not under their respective titles, a system familiar to readers of Burke's Extinct Peerage. In almost every case the younger children in each generation are recorded, though junior branches are not as a rule given in much detail unless the succession ultimately fell to them. Scottish and Irish titles have been included where the families possessing them owned estates in the North of England.

In the later generations many valuable entries from parish registers and references to wills are to be found, as might have been expected from Mr. Clay, whose familiarity with Yorkshire records is beyond question.

The authorities which have been consulted are generally added, a great advantage to those who desire to test the accuracy of the pedigrees. Among these authorities undue prominence has been accorded to the Dictionary of National Biography, for a profound knowledge of early genealogy is not among the undoubted merits of that monumental work. On the other hand, we do not find a single reference to the latest authority on the Scottish Peerage, edited by Sir James Balfour Paul.

Two exceptions seem to have been made to the rule which limits the work to extinct peerages, for the Earldoms of Shrewsbury and Huntingdon are included, though both of them are happily still in existence.

A few errors, due no doubt to a close following of the older peerage writers, may be noted. On p. 141, a daughter of Thomas Mowbray, first Duke of Norfolk, is incorrectly stated to have been married to Nicholas, Lord Audley, and to John, Lord Beaumont. On p. 144, Margaret de Longvillers is given as wife both to Geoffrey de Neville the father and to his son of the same names. On p. 166 the heiress of the later Percys is said to have been Baroness Percy, Lucy and Poynings, to which dignities she would have had no claim even if the attainders affecting them had been reversed. But for a footnote on p. 4, where reference is made to it, we should have thought that these pedigrees had been compiled before the appearance of the first volume of the new edition of the Complete Peerage, for the important changes made by Mr. G. W. Watson in his scholarly revision of the article on the Earls of Aumale or Albemarle have been entirely ignored.

In the article on the Grahams, Viscount Preston, the brothers of the first baronet, Sir Richard Graham of Eske, have been omitted, though the will of one of them, Ranald or Reginald Graham of London and Nunnington, co. York, dated 14 Nov. 1679, and proved P.C.C. 2 Dec. 1685 (150 Cann), is very material to the later pedigree. It was no doubt this Reginald, and not his great-nephew, Reginald Graham, of Pickhill, who was buried at Nunnington in January 1685. Henry Graham, husband of an illegitimate daughter of Charles II, has been relegated by Mr. Clay with a query to a footnote, though his place in the pedigree has been quite accurately given in The Scots Peerage, vol. vii, p. 102.

Some of the references are hardly sufficient, as for instance: "mar. Agnes . . . (Patent Rolls)," under Roger Bertram the fourth on p. 15. Of misprints the most serious is "Restoration" for "Revolution," under Charles Powlett, second Duke of Bolton, on p. 171.

CHURCH AND MANOR: A STUDY IN ENGLISH ECONOMIC HISTORY. By Sidney Oldall Addy, M.A. (Geo. Allen and Co.)

That the antiquary and the student of English Economic History will alike welcome Mr. Addy's latest erudite and painstaking collection of mediæval facts, there can be no question. But whether many will be prepared, after reading his book, to subscribe to the conclusion warranted, as the author believes, by the data assembled, is another matter and one upon which we do not feel so certain. In five-and-twenty chapters of absorbing interest Mr. Addy develops the story of the evolution and building of the Church and of the Hall, dealing in turn with their structure, their sites, their connection with defence, with local government, with trade, with manorial and municipal courts and a dozen other functions whereby both institutions were intimately woven into the fabric of rural life. But since Mr. Addy considers that in all recent surveys of that unit of English territorial organization known as the Manor an "essential part of the subject has been omitted or misunderstood," he has set out to remedy this mistake in the volume before us. The manor and the ecclesiastical benefice having, he asserts, hitherto been wrongly regarded as entirely independent things, he has addressed himself to the task of proving "that the Hall cannot at an early date be distinguished from the Church, and that ecclesiastical benefices were themselves manors with all the privileges which belonged to feudal lordship." Mr. Addy even carries his theory so far as to maintain that "lord and priest were one and the same person."

The author has sought his evidence far and wide from every conceivable source. From architecture have been gleaned masses of facts, valuable and interesting enough in themselves, as to the varied uses to which church fabrics were put in mediæval times, his underlying contention being that "if it can be proved that the church fabric was evolved from the hall or lord's dwelling a strong presumption arises on that ground alone that the benefice was the Manor." Therefore Mr. Addy leads us through numerous structural parallels between churches and early domestic buildings, discussing tower chambers, western galleries, moated and fortified churches and their use as places of refuge and as watch towers, the close proximity in certain cases of churches to barrows and fortified mounds, and the commanding position selected for some churches. But the multiplication of hundreds of such instances has been quite accurately given in The Scots Peerage, vol. vii, p. 102.

Therefore Mr. Addy leads us through numerous structural parallels between churches and early domestic buildings, dissensing tower chambers, western galleries, moated and fortified churches and their use as places of refuge and as watch towers, the close proximity in certain cases of churches to barrows and fortified mounds, and the commanding position selected for some churches. But the multiplication of hundreds of such instances proves nothing but that churches were frequently put to secular uses; while proximity of site and similarity of design between church and hall at a period when communities were narrowly circumscribed within boundaries of safety, and building material and styles were limited, cannot be accepted as proving that the church and the hall, or even the parish and the manor, were the same thing. However, though we may be unable to agree with the conclusion to which Mr. Addy's researches have led him, much information and pleasure are to be derived from following him along the paths he has travelled and made smooth for our benefit.

THE PUBLICATIONS OF THE BEDFORDSHIRE HISTORICAL RECORD SOCIETY. VOL. i. (Aspley Guise, 1913.)

This substantial volume is a praiseworthy attempt to add Bedfordshire to the list, still short, of those counties which have thought it worth while to publish records and other kindred matter relating to their history. Of the five contributors to whose labours the volume is due, we much regret to have to record the death of Mr. Gore-Chambers, the author, or joint author, of three out of the nine articles here presented to us.

Of these the two most important are the Bedford Eyre of 1202, and some twenty charters of the Priory of Chicksand, from a Memoranda Roll—the first with the Latin text and a translation, the latter with three exceptions, unfortunately, only in an English version. Mr. Fowler has been well advised in completely printing the Eyre, although some of the documents have appeared elsewhere before. The method adopted in the R.O. Calendars, which, for example, prevents us from enjoying a Close Roll without having Palgrave's Writs and the Lords' Reports within easy reach to supply the omissions in the Calendar, is not one to be imitated.

The volume opens with an elaborate article on the Beauchamps of Bedford. We confess to some surprise on reading that "William de Beauchamp was at Runnymede and signed the Great Charter; he was in the list of the Barons consequently excommunicated." For, as the latest exponent of the Charter, Professor McKechnie, tersely remarks, "There are no signatures to the document." It is almost needless to add that neither Rymer nor Wendover (loc. cit.) give such a reason for the excommunication. This William married Ida, who is proved by an Essex Fine to have been daughter of the Earl of Salisbury and widow of a Ralph de Sumery. She held Newport Pagnell in dower. As Ralph de Sumery of Dudley and Newport, who was dead in 1210, left a widow Margaret, it is clear that the first-named Ralph was his (unnamed) son and heir who, we know, was in the custody of that Earl, and who will have died s.p., not long after. Mr. Fowler has however failed to perceive this, saying that "the only Ralph who can be readily traced about that period succeeded

Mr. Fowler has however failed to perceive this, saying that "the only Ralph who can be readily traced about that period succeeded to the barony of Gervase Paganell his mother's father [Gervase was Ralph's uncle, not his grandfather] in 1194-5 and died in 1210-11, leaving a widow Margaret: if Ida were the wife of this Ralph, the marriage must have been dissolved." The idea of a man leaving two "widows," each receiving dower, is quite untenable. If two, why not three? And what would the heir do then, poor thing? His castle for the necessary defence of the Realme would, of course, go. Mr. Round has seen to that. We tremble for even his capital messuage. On the same page (16) the manor of Belchamp, Essex, has been written by mistake for Tilwick, Beds. At least there is no mention of Belchamp in the Inquisition referred to, nor indeed to any Essex property whatever. The arrangement of the "References" for this article, all collected at the end, like the answers in an arithmetic, and unrelieved by a single quotation, must, however, have rendered the verification of them as difficult to the author as it is irksome to his readers. We wish the new venture every success.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE HISTORIC SOCIETY OF LANCASHIRE AND CHESHIRE FOR THE YEAR 1912. Vol. lxiv. New Series—Vol. xxviii. Liverpool (printed for the Society, 1913).

The members of the Historic Society of Lancashire and Cheshire may be cordially congratulated upon their latest volume, which not only surpasses its predecessors in quantity, but is fully equal to them in quality. Every class of antiquary, the ecclesiologist, the topographer and the genealogist will find something of interest here. The opening paper on "The Early Coffee Houses of Liverpool," by A. H. Arkle, brings vividly before the reader, life as it was lived in that ancient town during the eighteenth century. Mr. Wolfgang's paper on ancient screens in Cheshire and Lancashire churches, with its excellent photographic illustrations, and the Rev. W. A. Wickham's "Notes on Chapter Houses," which is not confined to the two counties, but deals with such buildings throughout England, are both of them of much value and increase our knowledge of the subjects with which they deal. Mr. W. Fergusson Irvine, has chosen the Bishops' Visitation Books for 1665, 1668 and 1671 to illustrate "Church Discipline after the Restoration," and remarks upon the value of these volumes to students of the early history of Nonconformity in this country. The typical selections which he gives us are of great interest and sometimes not a little amusing. A comprehensive and well-written article on the Royal Manor and Park of Shotwick is contributed by Mr. Ronald Stewart-Brown, who traces the history of Shotwick and the grantees who held it under the Crown from Domesday downwards, and gives some interesting details concerning the ancient castle there. In a very short paper on "Canting Arms in Cheshire," the Rev. E. E. Dorling touches the fringe of a most fascinating subject, which we would gladly have seen treated at greater length. In the examples of allusive arms to the barony of Gervase Paganell his mother's father [Gervase was Ralph's uncle, not his grandfather] in 1194-5 and died in 1210-11, leaving a widow Margaret: if she were the wife of this Ralph, the marriage must have been dissolved." The idea of a man leaving two "widows," each receiving dower, is quite untenable. If two, why not three? And what would the lor do then, poor thing? His cradle for the necessary defence of the Realm would, of course, go. Mr. Round has seen to that. We tremble for even his capital messuage. On the same page (16) the manor of Belchamp, Essex, has been written by mistake for Tilbwick, Beds. At least there is no mention of Belchamp in the Inquisition referred to, nor indeed to any Essex property whatever. The arrangement of the "References" for this article, all collected at the end, like the answers in an arithmetic, and unrelieved by a single quotation, must, however, have rendered the verification of them as difficult to the author as it is irksome to his readers. We wish the new venture every success.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE HISTORIC SOCIETY OF LANCASHIRE AND CHESHIRE FOR THE YEAR 1912. Vol. lxiv. New Series—Vol. xxviii. Liverpool (printed for the Society, 1913).

The members of the Historic Society of Lancashire and Cheshire may be cordially congratulated upon their latest volume, which not only surpasses its predecessors in quantity, but is fully equal to them in quality. Every class of antiquary, the ecclesiologist, the topographer and the genealogist will find something of interest here. The opening paper on "The Early Coffee Houses of Liverpool," by A. H. Abbie, brings vividly before the reader, life as it was lived in that ancient town during the eighteenth century. Mr. Wellbrook's paper on ancient screens in Cheshire and Lancashire churches, with its excellent photographic illustrations, and the Rev. W. A. Wickham's "Notes on Chapter Houses," which is not confined to the two counties, but deals with such buildings throughout England, are both of them of much value and increase our knowledge of the subjects with which they deal. Mr. W. Fergusson Irvine, has chosen the Bishops' Visitation Books for 1665, 1668 and 1671 to illustrate "Church Discipline after the Restoration," and remarks upon the value of these volumes to students of the early history of Nonconformity in this country. which he has collected, the puns are mostly obvious enough, and he who runs may read. Perhaps the most interesting and valuable contribution in this volume is to be found among "Communications," and is entitled "A Blackburnshire Puture Roll." It dates from the reign of Henry VI, and gives the names of those manorial lords who owed puture, that is meat for men, horses and dogs, within the Hundred of Blackburn. Mr. H. Ince Anderton has added explanatory footnotes, which show a wide acquaintance with the district and its chief families. Among "Communications," too, are the "Obits of the Radcliffes of Ordsall," from entries in a Book of Hours, preserved in the Bodleian Library, relating to the Radcliffes and their family connections, 1548-1578.

PARISH REGISTER SOCIETY OF DUBLIN. VOL. X. THE REGISTER OF ST. NICHOLAS WITHOUT, DUBLIN, 1694—1739. With Preface by James Mills, I.S.O. (Printed for the Society by William Pollard and Co. Ltd., Exeter.)

It is always a pleasure to receive one of the carefully edited and thoroughly well indexed volumes issued by this Society, and it is much to be wished that genealogists would show their appreciation of the good work which it is doing by adding their names to the list of subscribers. It sometimes seems that those enterprises which are most worthy of support are those which genealogists are most wont to neglect. That funds are greatly needed appears from the fact that the subscriptions received for this volume have not been sufficient to allow the whole of the burials contained in the register to be printed, and they end with the year 1720, though baptisms and marriages have been carried to 1739. Mr. Mills in his Preface tells us that the burials are very greatly in excess of the baptisms, and attributes this fact to the probability that the former include Roman Catholics and Nonconformists of all religious denominations, while the latter are confined to members of the Church of Ireland. This of course increases the value of the burial entries from a genealogical point of view. One marriage at least was celebrated by a Roman Catholic priest, for the fact is expressly recorded on page 94.

The Parish of St. Nicholas Without was, as Mr. Mills reminds us, a parish without a separate church, the parishioners worshipping in the north transept of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

The register does not contain many entries relating to the Irish aristocracy and very few persons are designated "Esquire," but some well-known names occur, as Barry, Gofton, Monck, O'Bryan, and St. Lawrence. To the Gofton entries should probably be added Joshua and Katherine "Goston," on page 105. Drawlingbow and Drawlinbox, which are separately indexed, are, we think, identical. Several French names are to be found, probably belonging to the large Huguenot colony in Dublin.

The register does not contain many entries relating to the Irish aristocracy, and very few persons are designated "Esquire," but some well-known names occur, as Barry, Cotton, Monck, O'Bryan, and St. Lawrence. To the Cotton entries should probably be added Joshua and Katherine "Coston," on page 105. Drawlingbow and Drawlinbox, which are separately indexed, are, we think, identical. Several French names are to be found, probably belonging to the large Huguenot colony in Dublin.

PEDIGREE WORK. A HANDBOOK FOR THE GENEALOGIST. By (the late) W. P. W. Phillimore, M.A., B.C.L., Second Edition. Revised by T. M. Blagg, F.S.A. London (Phillimore and Co., Ltd., Chancery Lane).

We are glad to see that this useful little vade mecum for beginners in genealogical research issued by the late Mr. Phillimore about fourteen years ago has now been brought up to date. It contains many hints which will be of value to anyone intending to compile a family history. In our notice of the original work we observed that in the list of Heralds' Visitations the 1532 Visitation of Berkshire, printed as a supplement to this Magazine three years previously, had been overlooked, and we regret to find that the omission has not been remedied. Scottish and Irish records are dealt with as well as those of England, and a chapter on Chronology, with a date book, will be found at the end of the miniature volume.

Notes and Queries.

FARMAR, OR FARMER, OF CO. CORK.—I shall be greatly obliged if any genealogist who is acquainted with the records of county Cork can tell me whether there were any brothers or paternal uncles of Captain George Farmer, R.N., who lost his life whilst valiantly defending his ship, H.M.S. "Quebec," against the French frigate, "La Surveillante," off Ushant, in 1779. In reward for his father's services, Captain Farmer's son, George William Farmer, was created a baronet, 19th January 1780. Captain Farmer's will, dated 9th April and proved P.C.C. 2nd November 1779 (452 Warburton) mentions only his widow, children and sisters. The accounts of this family given in the Baronetages are very meagre, but a long pedigree is contained in several editions of Burke's Landed Gentry, from which it appears that the gallant officer was son of John Farmer of Youghall (died 1740) by Alphra Garde his wife, and grandson of another John who married in 1686 Mary Hayles. It is not stated that there were other sons of either John Farmer, senior or junior. In the latest edition of the Landed Gentry of Ireland (1912, revised by A. C. Fox-Davies) many interesting details which were to be found in the 1850 edition of the Landed Gentry have disappeared, and one wonders whether they have been found inaccurate or whether a desire for brevity has been the reason of their omission. The alleged descent from the Farmers of Easton Neston, co.

Northampton, ancestors of the Earls of Pomfret, is one of these omissions, and another is the statement that Richard Farmer or Fermor of Arderrack, co. Cork, "was obliged to leave Ireland in 1689 and retired with his family to Taunton Deane in Somersetshire," returning to Ireland in 1691. Mr. Joseph Foster, in his Baronetage says that the Arms "are not recorded, but the following are used: Arg., a fesse Sa. between three lions' heads erased Gu. CREST—A leopard passant guardant ppr." These arms are those of the extinct Earls of Pomfret, though the crest is different, and in the later editions of Burke's Peerage and Baronetage we find that the crest of the Lords Pomfret has now been substituted for it and is used by the present baronet.

ANCESTRY OF SIMON STEWARD, OF MOBBERLEY, CO. CHESTER.—In the endeavour to trace back my ancestry I have succeeded in doing so as far as Simon Steward the elder, of Mobberley, co. Chester, yeoman, whose will dated September 10, 1651, is on file at Somerset House, London (P.C.C. 176 Grey), and I have an abstract of this will.

A careful search of the parish registers and other sources of genealogical information obtainable in this country has failed to disclose the ancestors of the said Simon Steward. The Rolls of the Freemen of the City of Chester, which were made, I understand, about 1545, show a Thomas Steward, ironmonger, and a marriage licence was granted in the diocese of Chester on May 6, 1609, to "Thomas Steward, otherwise Saunders," to marry Katherine Eaton of Great Budworth; but I am unable to locate any other Stewards or Stewarts in Cheshire previous to Simon.

I find a few Stewards in other parts of England, but all the information I can gather points to a connection between the various families of the name and the Stewards or Stywards of Norfolk; and the fact that the name Simon or Simeon appears frequently in the Norfolk family has led me to think that possibly the Simon of Cheshire might have been a member of one of its branches. Simeon or Simon Steward, the son of Nicholas Steward of Norfolk, seems to have died in 1568 (see Page's History of Suffolk, p. 840). Noble says he was the son of Nicholas and the grandson of Richard Steward or Styward.

I shall be grateful for any additional information on the Steward families of England about the beginning of the seventeenth century that would possibly throw any light on the probable ancestry of the Simon Steward of Mobberley, Cheshire, who died in 1651.

A PEDIGREE OF THE FAMILY OF GERARD OF CREWOOD, FRODSHAM, &c., IN THE COUNTY OF CHESTER, DRAWN BY RANDLE HOLME OF CHESTER IN 1691; AND THE DESCENT CONTINUED IN THE FAMILY OF PERRYN OF TRAFFORD HALL IN THE SAME COUNTY, ABOUT 1840.

The descents in this pedigree were written by Randle Holme on a representation, in water-colours, of folds of twisted ribbon, the back of the ribbon being yellow ornamented with marks in sepia, and the front, on which the names, etc. are inscribed, shaded red at each side. The roll measures 4 feet 10½ inches by 9½ inches.

At the foot of the pedigree there is a large coat-of-arms with an esquire's helmet and an elaborate mantlet, Gules doubled Argent. Arms.—Argent, a saltire Gules, charged in the centre with a crescent Or [GERARD]; impaling Ermine, a lion rampant Azure, armed and langued Gules, crowned Or [PICKERING]. Crest.—A lion's jamb erased Ermine, grasping a hawk's lure Or. Motto.—On a ribbon below the arms, IEHOUAH JIREH.

It will be observed that the discredited Fitzgerald descent is claimed in this pedigree, although, in 1635, Randle Holme had satisfied himself that it was what he calls "a false pretence." In The Ancestor, No. 7, page 22, Mr. Round has dealt explicitly with this fabulous ancestry, which, however, continues to appear in the pages of some of the "Peerages." It is to be regretted that the pedigree of so ancient and interesting a family as that of Gerard has not been more fully worked out and amplified from the public records and other trustworthy sources of information, especially as it was not recorded at any of the Lancashire Visitations prior to Sir William Dugdale's in 1664-65, when the Fitzgerald arms were allowed on what we are forced to conclude must have been insufficient evidence.

PEDIGREE OF THE FAMILY OF FREIND.

With Monumental Inscriptions, Abstracts of Wills, and other Evidences.

By Arthur J. Jewers.

The accompanying pedigree, with the monumental inscriptions and abstracts of wills in support of it, appears to be of sufficient interest to claim a place in The Genealogist, as the family produced at least three rather prominent men in their day, namely, the Rev. Robert Freind, D.D., Headmaster of Westminster School and a Canon of Christ Church, Oxford; his brother, John Freind, M.D., Physician to Queen Caroline, a Tory M.P. for Launceston in Cornwall, and a friend of Bishop Atterbury. The eldest son of the former was Dean of Canterbury, and married Grace, sister and coheir of his Grace, Richard Robinson, Archbishop of Armagh, who was created Lord Rokeby, of Armagh, in the Peerage of Ireland. It would be out of place here, as well as unnecessary, to repeat the biographical accounts of Dr. John Freind and of his nephew the Dean of Canterbury and others of the family, which will be found in Nicholls' Literary Anecdotes, vol. ix, p. 583; Lipscomb's History of Buckinghamshire, vol. iii, p. 282; The Dictionary of National Biography, etc.; but these do not supply genealogical particulars, the materials for which have been obtained from the "Registers of Westminster Abbey," edited by the late Col. J. L. Chester, and two or three county histories, together with much original research. Unfortunately the latter has failed to carry the pedigree beyond the grandfather of Dean Freind. The family probably belong to one of the same name settled in Kent from an early date and using arms similar to those confirmed to the Dean, and which appear on his book-plate reproduced at the head of this article.

For searches at Peterborough I am indebted to the kindness of the Rev. W. M. Noble, Rector of Wistow, who has taken much trouble to help, having supplied the notes of presentations to Croughton, and assisted in an attempt to trace the family in Northamptonshire wills.

The collateral pedigree shows the relationship of Dr. John Freind with Bishop Atterbury, with whose political plots Dr. Freind was suspected of being connected, which led to the imprisonment of the latter; and the connection with Bishop Sprat (or Spratt) who wrote the epitaph on Dr. Freind, placed on his cenotaph in Westminster Abbey.

Croughton.

The following inscription and particulars of the monument in Croughton Church for the Rev. William Freind are taken from Baker's History of Northamptonshire, vol. i, p. 601, where it is said to be a handsome monument of white and veined marbles, with the inscription on a rectangular tablet between pilasters supporting an entablature with books piled on either side and an urn in the centre and these Arms: Gules, a chevron Ermine between three bucks' heads caboshed Or. The book calls the field of the Arms, Sable, but that is an error due, no doubt, to the red having turned black from lead in the composition of the colour.

THE GREAT SEAL OF THE MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER.

The following are a few notes, hurriedly put together, on the Great Seal of the Order of the Garter of which an illustration of the obverse appeared as frontispiece to the last volume of this magazine and a reproduction of the reverse forms the frontispiece to the current volume. This seal appears to have been engraved in the year 1716. In Garter's Office is a draft of a warrant addressed to "Our Trusty and welbeloved Servant . . . Engraver of Our Mint in Our Tower of London," as follows:—

"Our Will and Pleasure is That you Prepare forthwith or Cause to be Prepared for the use of our Our Most Noble Order of the Garter one large Silver Seal of the usual Form and Weight Engraved on one Side with the Image of St. George slaying a Dragon having in his right hand a Sword and bearing on his left Arm a Shield of the Armes of the said Saint, Patron of Our said Order, the whole circumscribed with these words SIGILLVM MAGNVM NOBILISSIMI ORDINIS GARTERII. THE GREAT SEAL OF THE MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER.

The following are a few notes, hurriedly put together, on the Great Seal of the Order of the Garter of which an illustration of the obverse appeared as frontispiece to the last volume of this magazine and a reproduction of the reverse forms the frontispiece to the current volume. This seal appears to have been engraved in the year 1710. In Garter's Office is a draft of a warrant addressed to "Our Trusty and welbeloved Servant . . . Engraver of Our Mint in Our Tower of London," as follows:—

"Our Will and Pleasure is That you Prepare forthwith or Cause to be Prepared for the use of our Our Most Noble Order of the Garter one large Silver Seal of the usual Form and Weight Engraved on one Side with the Image of St. George slaying a Dragon having in his right hand a Sword and bearing on his left Arm a Shield of the Armes of the said Saint, Patron of Our said Order, the whole circumscribed with these words SIGILLUM MAGNUM NOBILISSIMI ORDINIS GARTERII. And on the other side the Armes of Our said Order, Impaled with Our Royal Armes as now borne by us in a Shield within the Garter, circumscribed with this Motto HONI SOIT QUI MAL Y PENSE, and Surmounted with an Imperial Crown; And Our further Pleasure is that you likewise Prepare or cause to be Prepared a Signet in Steel of the usual Form and Size, Engraved with the Armes of Our said Order impaled with Our Royal Armes encompass'd with a Garter circumscribed and Surmounted with an Imperial Crown, according to the forms heretofore used, both which you are to deliver, or cause to be delivered, to our Right Revd: Father in God William Lord Bishop of Salisbury, Chancellor of Our said Order, And for so doing this shall be a sufficient Warrant: Given at Our Court at St. James's under the Signet of Our said Order this . . . day of . . . 1716 and in the Second year of Our Reign.

"By the Sovereign's especial Command."

There was a similar warrant to the Engraver of the Mint in November 1704, in which he was directed to deliver the seals to Gilbert, Bishop of Salisbury, the Chancellor. New Seals were ordered to be provided for the Chancellor under a warrant dated 15 December 1698 as the former one, notwithstanding the alteration in the Royal Arms had been in use since the reign of Charles the First. Vertue, however, wrote that the Seal of Charles I. was melted down at the Mint and another, with similar obverse, was made at the Restoration and is shown in Simon's Great Seals.[1] Illustrations of the Seals of the Garter used in the reigns of Henry VIII., James I. and Charles I. are to be found in Ashmole's "Institution, Laws and Ceremonies of the Most Noble Order of the Garter," 1693 (pp. 246, 247). The device of St. George and the Dragon probably first appeared in the last mentioned reign and was the work of Simon.

VISITATION OF ENGLAND AND WALES. Edited by Frederick Arthur Crisp. Notes, Vol. x. (Privately printed).

With his accustomed care and accuracy Mr. Crisp presents to us in this latest volume of "Notes" the genealogy of twenty-nine families, of which no less than ten have attained to the Peerage. The later generations of these families are contained in the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth volumes of the author's well known "Visitation." Often as many of them have been previously printed, the pedigrees here recorded have never received more careful treatment and frequently details are added which do not appear elsewhere, as for instance in the account of the Bagots, where the marriages of daughters of the house are given more delivered, to our Right Revd: Father in God William Lord Bishop of Salisbury, Chancellor of Our said Order. And for so doing this shall be a sufficient Warrant: Given at Our Court at St. James's under the Signet of Our said Order this . . . day of . . . 1710 and in the Second year of Our Reign.

"By the Sovereign's especial Command."

There was a similar warrant to the Engraver of the Mint in November 1701, in which he was directed to deliver the seals to Gilbert, Bishop of Salisbury, the Chancellor. New Seals were ordered to be provided for the Chancellor under a warrant dated 15 December 1698 as the former one, notwithstanding the alteration in the Royal Arms had been in use since the reign of Charles the first. Vertue, however, wrote that the Seal of Charles I. was melted down at the Mint and another, with similar obverse, was made at the Restoration and is shown in Simon's Great Seals.[1] Illustrations of the Seals of the Garter used in the reigns of Henry VIII., James I. and Charles I. are to be found in Ashmole's "Institution, Laws and Ceremonies of the Most Noble Order of the Garter," 1693 (pp. 246, 247). The device of St. George and the Dragon probably first appeared in the last mentioned reign and was the work of Simon.

VISITATION OF ENGLAND AND WALES. Edited by Frederick Arthur Crisp. Notes, Vol. x. (Privately printed).

With his accustomed care and accuracy Mr. Crisp presents to us in this latest volume of "Notes" the genealogy of twenty-nine families, of which no less than ten have attained to the Peerage. The later generations of these families are contained in the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth volumes of the author's well known "Visitation." Often as many of them have been previously printed, the pedigrees here recorded have never received more careful treatment and frequently details are added which do not appear elsewhere, as for instance in the account of the Bagots, where the marriages of daughters of the house are given more fully than they are in General Wrottesley's invaluable history of the family. It may be noted here that Mr. Crisp gives to Sir Lewis Bagot (d. 1531) three wives, Lucy Kniveton, Emma Kniveton and Anne Montgomery. It seems probable, however, that Emma merely occurs in the Staffordshire Visitation of 1583 in error for Lucy, and that Sir Lewis married twice only. Emma does not appear in any of the family deeds, and there is no other trace of her to be found. Even with the sure hand of General Wrottesley to guide, the pedigree here only begins with Ralph Bagot, lord of Blithfield in 1361, though this is one of the very rare instances where male descent from a Domesday tenant can be traced with certainty. In other cases the determination not to carry a family to its source is no doubt wise, for thorny questions are thus avoided. The descent of the Sussex Burrells as given in the eighth volume of Brydges' edition of "Collins' Peerage" is known to be doubtful, while the Fane pedigree was some years ago the subject of controversy in this Magazine.[1] On the other hand, the Burdetts might surely have been carried beyond the first baronet, with whom Mr. Crisp elects to begin. Besides the Fanes this volume contains another instance of the descent of a noble house from a Kentish yeoman, in the pedigree of the Earls Amherst, and a third example of a rise from small beginnings to social importance may be noted in the case of the Lubbocks, for among the ancestors of the distinguished scientist, Lord Avebury, whose loss we have so recently had to deplore, are several Norfolk cordwainers and worsted weavers. As a contrast we may turn to the pedigree of the Somersets, Dukes of Beaufort, and Barons Raglan, whose history must always possess a strong interest for Englishmen, for though their male descent from "time honoured Lancaster" is doubly illegitimate, they are all that is left to us of the kingly Plantagenets. The ancestry of two celebrated statesmen, Sir Robert Peel and the second Earl Grey, should be an attraction to this volume, while all genealogists will be interested in the descent of the well-known writer, Mr. J. Horace Round.

An Address from the Gentry of Norfolk and Norwich to General Monck in 1660. With an Introduction by Hamon Le Strange, F.S.A., and Biographical Notes by Walter Rye. Norwich (Jarrold and Sons).

When, in December, 1911, the Townshend heirlooms came under the hammer there figured in the catalogue a manuscript address from the gentry of Norfolk and Norwich, undated and without superscription, described as being "apparently to Oliver Cromwell." Appended to it was a list of about a thousand signatures, which appeared to include the names of nearly every person of importance, at that time, in the city of Norwich and county of Norfolk. The document, on the advice of Mr. Walter Rye, that renowned labourer in the archæological treasure-stores of his native county, was acquired, in a truly enlightened municipal spirit, by the Norwich Public Library. AN ADDRESS FROM THE GENTRY OF NORFOLK AND NORWICH TO GENERAL MONCK IN 1660. With an Introduction by Hamon Le Strange, F.S.A., and Biographical Notes by Walter Rye. Norwich (Jarrold and Sons).

When, in December, 1911, the Townshend heirlooms came under the hammer there figured in the catalogue a manuscript address from the gentry of Norfolk and Norwich, undated and without superscription, described as being "apparently to Oliver Cromwell." Appended to it was a list of about a thousand signatures, which appeared to include the names of nearly every person of importance, at that time, in the city of Norwich and county of Norfolk. The document, on the advice of Mr. Walter Rye, that renowned laborer in the archæological treasure-stores of his native county, was acquired, in a truly enlightened municipal spirit, by the Norwich Public Library. genealogical lore, we owe the present facsimile reproduction of the address and signatures, published at the suggestion of Mr. George A. Stephen, the city librarian, in an edition limited to 250 copies.

Mr. Hamon Le Strange is responsible for an Introduction of some length and much interest. That the Address had nothing to do with Cromwell, but is one among many of similar purport prepared for presentation to General Monck in the period immediately preceding the Restoration, he proves conclusively from evidence, both internal and external, and is able to quote in this connection from a letter written in June 1660 by his ancestor, Roger L'Estrange, who remarks that during Monck's march from Scotland in the January of that year he "was plyed with Addresses for a Free Parliament throughout his whole passage." Mr. Le Strange then proceeds to analyse the signatures generally, with reference to locality, recalling in so doing many interesting facts of those troubled political days.

Mr. Rye's task of transcribing so large a number of signatures, many well-nigh illegible, some absolutely so, was by far the hardest; fortunately he was specially equipped by reason of his exceptional familiarity with county documents and names. He has printed, first, a transcription of the signatures in the order in which they are attached to the document; secondly an alphabetical list of these names, and finally some biographical notes "on such of those who can be identified." That the document seems to have emanated chiefly from Norwich, and the absence of the names of any such prominent families as Calthorpe, Gawdy, Heydon, Jerningham, Kemp, Knyvett, Layer, Paston, Pratt, Skelton, or Skippon, may be noted among curious points to which he draws attention.

A list of books on the Civil War period in the Norwich Public Library, compiled by the Librarian, follows Mr. Rye's section, and forms a useful appendix. Last of all comes the facsimile of the Address and signatures, which reflects great credit on the publisher. The photogravure portraits of General Monck and certain Norfolk worthies among the signatories, enhance very considerably the interest and value of the monograph. It must be acknowledged that Mr. Rye and Mr. Le Strange have added an important item to the history of Norfolk, for which their county should be deeply grateful.

List of Inscriptions on Tombstones and Monuments in Ceylon. By J. Penry Lewis, C.M.G., Ceylon Civil Service (retired). (Government Record Office, Colombo.)

The author states in his preface that the idea of the book was suggested by a "List of Inscriptions on Tombstones, etc., in the Presidency of Madras" by Mr. J. J. Cotton, of the Madras Civil Service, and by a similar book by Mr. C. R. Wilson, dealing with monumental inscriptions in Bengal. The Ceylon book under review has been compiled in a more thorough way than either of them. Mr. Lewis has included every church and cemetery in the island where Europeans have been stationed, and has omitted no name or monument of any importance. He was only able to find sixteen Portuguese inscriptions, including the one

List of Inscriptions on Tombstones and Monuments in Ceylon. By J. Perry Lewis, C.M.G., Ceylon Civil Service (retired). (Government Record Office, Colombo.)

The author states in his preface that the idea of the book was suggested by a "List of Inscriptions on Tombstones, etc., in the Presidency of Madras" by Mr. J. J. Cotton, of the Madras Civil Service, and by a similar book by Mr. C. R. Wilson, dealing with monumental inscriptions in Bengal. The Ceylon book under review has been compiled in a more thorough way than either of them. Mr. Lewis has included every church and cemetery in the island where Europeans have been stationed, and has omitted no name or monument of any importance. He was only able to find sixteen Portuguese inscriptions, including the one on the Breakwater at Colombo. The Dutch inscriptions are much more numerous. The Dutch had more factories round the coast than the Portuguese, and at each factory of importance they had a church as well as a cemetery. The care of the Portuguese monuments fell to the Dutch, and the preservation of the Dutch memorials fell to the English. This made all the difference. Mr. Lewis in his preface narrates the fate of the Portuguese tombstones, which all genealogists and many others will regret. He says " We are told by Saar, a German soldier in the Dutch Company's service, that the Dutch sailors broke up the tombstones in the churches and in a monastery outside the Fort of Jaffna and used the pieces to load their mortars with, and that these missiles were daily thrown into the town along with the grenades and proved most destructive, so that the unfortunate Portuguese were destroyed by the tombs of their progenitors and relatives which they had piously erected to their memory."

From the eight old Dutch churches and cemeteries Ludovici compiled his handsome book of early monuments, which De Vos at a later date supplemented. The present compilation supplements both, without rendering either unnecessary to the historical and genealogical student. Besides doing this, it records the principal inscriptions from over one hundred British cemeteries which have been in use during the nineteenth century; these include those laid out by former generations of planters in the hill districts, by missionaries in places where they have resided, by merchants in various sea-ports, as well as by the Government of Ceylon in official centres.

The author describes the old burial grounds and the old churches when they are of any particular interest; among these may be especially mentioned the old Dutch Church and burial ground in the Pettah at Colombo, and the old garrison church in the Fort. The information he gives about such hallowed places as Jaffna, Galle, and Trincomallee is of much interest. But the crowning part of his work consists in the obituary notices. He has gathered his information from many sources, and has given the lives of most of the eminent men who have served in Ceylon. His book, on which both he and the Government are to be congratulated, is of the character of a Dictionary of National Biography of Ceylon. It is hoped that one result of the publication of this book will be that the Government will spend a little money to keep in order the resting-places and the monuments of those who served it so well in their generation. Above all, the Pettah Cemetery in Colombo ought not to be encroached upon and desecrated by the speculative builder.

ULSTER FOLKLORE. By Elizabeth Andrews, F.R.A.I. (Elliot Stock.)

In this collection of seven essays which had previously seen the light in the pages of the Antiquary, or been read by their author to the archæological section of the Belfast Naturalists' Field Club, we are given the results of a careful investigation, at first hand, of the sources whence spring the traditional belief of the Irish peasantry in the existence

Ulster Folklore. By Elizabeth Andrews, F.R.A.I. (Elliot Stock.)

In this collection of seven essays which had previously seen the light in the pages of the Antiquary, or been read by their author to the archæological section of the Belfast Naturalists' Field Club, we are given the results of a careful investigation, at first hand, of the sources whence spring the traditional belief of the Irish peasantry in the existence

among them of a race of "wee-folk," or fairies. The author was led to take up this line of research through a lecture delivered at Oxford in 1894, by Professor Julius Kollmann, on "Pygmies in Europe," a small people, judging from the then recently discovered skeletons at Schaffhausen, "whose average height was about four and a half feet." Miss Andrews then recalled to mind a description once given to her of Irish fairies in Galway, and subsequent enquiries among the country people of the Northern Province convinced her that in the tales thus collected were definite reminiscences of a similar dwarf race: "the fairies," says she, "are indeed regarded as small, but their height may be that of a well-grown boy or girl, or they may not be larger than a child beginning to walk. I once asked a woman if they were as small as cocks and hens, but she laughed at the suggestion." Necessarily a good deal of discussion centres round the raths and souterrains, those so-called fairy dwelling-places, which are certainly the work of human hands, and around which throng numerous legends pointing to the probability that they were once inhabited by a red-haired dwarf race who "rode on ponies, were good musicians, could spin and weave and grind corn." The traditional records of several small races in Ulster—grogachs, closely akin to the fairies and to English and Scottish brownies; the short Danes, the Pechts or Picts, and the small Finns—have confirmed the author's belief that they rest on a true historical basis and that these small people represent primitive races of mankind. "In the stories of women, children and men being carried off by the fairies we have a record of warfare when stealthy raids were made and captives brought to the dark souterrain."

The eighth and last chapter of the small volume is devoted to an article on the Rev. William Hamilton, D.D., that early exponent of the volcanic origin of the Giants' Causeway and writer on Ulster customs and antiquities, who was brutally murdered by revolutionaries in 1797.

The book has fourteen illustrations, twelve being excellent photographs of souterrains, Irish crosses, harvest knots and other symbols, and two, plans of the souterrains at Ballymagreehan and Knockdhu.

Dwelly's Parish Records. Edited by E. Dwelly. Vol. ii. The First Portion of the Bishop's Transcripts at Wells [Section ii, Parishes H—Y]. Copied from the Originals by Arthur J. Jewers. Herne Bay (printed and published by the Editor).

The second volume of the Wells Episcopal Transcripts follows closely upon the first, and completes a work of considerable importance to West Country genealogists. The Editor in his Preface to this volume gives a comparison between the marriages of the parish of East Pennard for the years 1608 and 1621, as given in the parish register and in the transcripts. This shows how greatly the two records differ and proves the value of the transcripts, for in some instances in the former year marriages are given there which do not occur in the parish register. There are also numerous differences in the names as recorded by the two authorities.

DWELLY'S PARISH RECORDS. Edited by E. Dwelly. Vol. ii. The First Portion of the Bishop's Transcripts at Wells [Section ii, Parishes H—Y]. Copied from the Originals by Arthur J. Jewers. Horne Bay (printed and published by the Editor).

The second volume of the Wells Episcopal Transcripts follows closely upon the first, and completes a work of considerable importance to West Country genealogists. The Editor in his Preface to this volume gives a comparison between the marriages of the parish of East Pennard for the years 1808 and 1821, as given in the parish register and in the transcripts. This shows how greatly the two records differ and proves the value of the transcripts, for in some instances in the former year marriages are given there which do not occur in the parish register. There are also numerous differences in the names as recorded by the two authorities.

Shepton Malet, Somerton and Wellington, all of them flourishing places in the seventeenth century, are included in this part, but we find nothing for either Taunton or Wells. From the thickly populated parishes adjacent to Bristol there was a constant stream of emigrants to the New World, and our friends on the other side of the Atlantic will find much to interest them in these transcripts. Under Walton in Gordano occurs the following entry :—

> "Others have been buryed here and one or more Xtoned here by the Minister of Portishead who pretends to have a right to bury and baptise at Weston, whose names are not, nor at any tyme were entered in o^r^ Register Booke. Thomas Foote, Rector."

It is to be hoped that at Portishead a record of these names are kept, but there are no transcripts for that parish given here. Among the Somerset county families frequently occurring in these pages are the Dorringtons, Hippesleys, Paulets or Pouletts of Hinton St. George, Portmans of Orchard Portman, Rodneys of Rodney Stoke, and the Walronds or Waldrons. Under Stone Easton on 16 Dec. 1594 is the marriage of the then Bishop of the Diocese, John Still, to Mrs Jane Horner. Among curious surnames may be instanced Twothomastwowills on p. 34, Cusculo on p. 93, and Nayno on p. 122 ; while the following baptismal oddities have been noted—Anactetus and Mizacke for men, and Salijah and Sophrozuny for women.

The Editor reminds his readers that he has a manuscript index to these transcripts, which can be searched for a small fee.

Yorkshire Marriage Registers. West Riding. Vol. i, Rotherham. Edited by Rev. C. S. James, B.A. Phillimore's Parish Register Series. Vol. cci. London (Phillimore & Co.).

It is only fitting that in an attempt to print in this series the marriage entries in Yorkshire Parish Registers a beginning should be made with the West Riding, owing to its close proximity to Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire, in which counties so many registers have already been laid under contribution. In the choice of Rotherham too, wisdom has been displayed, for the parish books there go back to 1540, and have been most carefully kept, a large part of the original paper register being still in existence. In this volume, which consists of 304 pages, abstracts of all the marriage entries are given 1540–1798, and we are glad to learn that another will follow in a few months, bringing the work down to June 1837. It is also good news that this second part is to contain a full index to both volumes, for Yorkshire folk are, we are sure, far too thorough in their methods to subscribe to an unindexed parish register. In all respects the arrangement adopted is that in use in the other registers printed in this well-known series. Mr. T. M. Blagg, the general Editor, has written a Preface, and in collaboration with the Rev. C. S. James, to whom the greatest credit is due for his abstracts of the marriage entries which appear to have been most carefully made, an Introduction of considerable interest.

Notes and Queries.

James Molloy.—James Molloy, of Dublin, married in 1746 at Dublin, Anne, widow of Lionel Rich (a Dutch merchant, who died in 1742) and daughter of Henry Pye, of Farringdon, Berks; they had issue two sons, Anthony James Pye and Charles, and one daughter Frances, who married, 18 May 1766, William Mitford of Exbury, Hants, and died 27 April 1776. Who were the parents, and what were the arms (if any) of James Molloy? In the Registry of St. Catherine's Church, Dublin, is an entry of the baptism of James, son of Luke and Catherine Meloye, on 6 June 1708, but it has not been found possible to obtain proof that these were one and the same James.

Sarah Woodward.—Born 21 Nov. 1784, married 23 Jan. 1802 John, second son of William Mitford, of Exbury, Hants, and died 30 March 1836. Information is requested as to her parentage and arms (if any) of her father's and mother's family.

Kenrick and Finnamore or Fynmore Families.—In the Marriage Licences of Salisbury for January, 1911, is the following:—

"1629. Kendricke, Thomas, of St. Giles, Reading, Clothier, 22, and Mary Finnamore, of North Inkshe, co. Berks, sp., 20. 28 Ap."

There was at that date a family of Fynmore living at North Hinksey, near Oxford. I should like to ascertain if the above marriage took place, as in the pedigree of Kenrick of Reading, entered at the Heralds Visitation of Berkshire (see The Genealogist, Old Series, vol. v, p. 282), Thomas Kenrick married Martha, da. of Sir Henry Davy, and had a son William, æt. 32, 11 Mar. 1664, afterwards created a Baronet. From extracts in Coates's "Hist. of Reading," from St. Giles parish registers, I find that Thomas Kendrick mar. 14 Feb. 1630, Mrs. Martha Davye, and on the 26 Dec. 1631, the baptism of "William Kenricke, sonne of Thomas." It is significant that two subsequent baptismal entries, 1637 and 1641 state "son of Thomas and Martha"; can it be that William was the son of Mary the first wife? Possibly she died giving birth to William, and his baptism was delayed until after the second marriage.

Brothers of Admiral Blake.—I came across quite by accident recently a query on the subject of the family of Blake, which appeared in The Genealogist, N.S., vol. v, p. 209, signed with the initials "G.H.J." (no address given). If "G.H.J." is still a reader of the Magazine, I think I can furnish him with some information that would be of interest and value.

Notes and Queries.

James Molloy.—James Molloy, of Dublin, married in 1746 at Dublin, Anne, widow of Lionel Rich (a Dutch merchant, who died in 1742) and daughter of Henry Pye, of Farringdon, Berks; they had issue two sons, Anthony James Pye and Charles, and one daughter Frances, who married, 18 May 1766, William Mitford of Exbury, Hants, and died 27 April 1776. Who were the parents, and what were the arms (if any) of James Molloy? In the Registry of St. Catherine's Church, Dublin, is an entry of the baptism of James, son of Luke and Catherine Meloye, on 6 June 1708, but it has not been found possible to obtain proof that these were one and the same James.

Sarah Woodward.—Born 21 Nov. 1781, married 23 Jan. 1802 John, second son of William Mitford, of Exbury, Hants, and died 30 March 1836. Information is requested as to her parentage and arms (if any) of her father's and mother's family.

Kenrick and Finnamore on Fyvmore Families.—In the Marriage Licences of Salisbury for January, 1911, is the following:—

"1629. Kendricke, Thomas, of St. Giles, Reading, Clothier, 22, and Mary Finnamore, of North Inkste, co. Berks, sp., 20. 28 Ap."

There was at that date a family of Fyvmore living at North Hinksey, near Oxford. I should like to ascertain if the above marriage took place, as in the pedigree of Kenrick of Reading, entered at the Heralds Visitation of Berkshire (see The Genealogist, Old Series, vol. v, p. 283), Thomas Kenrick married Martha, da. of Sir Henry Davy, and had a son William, ob. 32, 11 Mar. 1661, afterwards created a Baronet. From extracts in Coates's "Hist. of Reading," from St. Giles parish registers, I find that Thomas Kendrick mar. 14 Feb. 1630, Mrs. Martha Davye, and on the 20 Dec. 1631, the baptism of "William Kenricke, sonne of Thomas." Possibly she died giving birth to William, and his baptism was delayed until after the second marriage.

EXTRACTS OF MARRIAGES AT THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE, 1806—1821.

The following extracts of marriages at the Cape of Good Hope will, I think, be of interest to the British genealogist, as they comprise the marriages of those born in the British Isles.

The comparatively small number (as far as I have been able to authentically trace) denoted by an asterisk[1] give those British families still represented in South Africa to-day. This shows that for some years after the taking of the Cape in 1806 there was no serious attempt to settle Britishers here.

This list gives 216 extracts, of which number a little more than 58 per cent. represents marriages of male Britishers to Colonials. Only one shows an alliance of a Colonial to a Scotch lady (Cloete—Graham). During the last fifty years this has been more the rule than the exception, i.e., Colonials intermarrying with Britishers.

These extracts have been made from two sources, each used simultaneously: the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Matrimonial Court (in Dutch), and the Cape Town Gazette. The Matrimonial Court consisted of a body of Government officials, before whom all persons desiring to enter into the bonds of matrimony had to appear. The parties had to satisfy the Court as to their full names, birthplace, age, religion, whether widow, widower, spinster, bachelor, or if there was any other engagement of marriage subsisting.

Upon these points being satisfactorily answered, a certificate was granted them by the Court, stating that there was no objection to their banns being called. This they presented to the clergyman, who published the banns on three consecutive Sundays.

Should any objection have been raised, the matter was referred back by the minister to the Matrimonial Court, who decided on the point at issue. Persons who wished to marry without the publication of banns had to obtain a special licence from the Governor of the Colony.

From the Minutes I have extracted the names of the parties, their age, birthplace, and calling; the earlier Minutes only give the names of the parties.

From the Cape Town Gazette, which for some years was the only paper published here, I have taken, from the marriage advertisements, particulars of the date and place where the marriage took place.

References:—

(b) English Church.

[1] To my knowledge there are descendants of these families still in the Union of South Africa to-day; maybe there are descendants of some of the other names.
